> This intolerable topsy-turvydom is no exaggeration of the way in which stories cut across each other, and sites are imposed on each other in the historic places of the Holy City. Now we in the West are very lucky in having our nations normally distributed into their native lands, so that good patriots can talk about themselves without perpetually annoying their neighbors. Some of the pacifists tell us that national frontiers and divisions are evil because they exasperate us to war. It would be far truer to say that national frontiers and divisions keep us at peace. It would be far truer to say that we can always love each other so long as we do not see each other. But the people of Jerusalem are doomed to have difference without division. They are driven to set pillar against pillar in the same temple, while we can set city against city across the plains of the world. While for us a church rises from its foundations as naturally as a flower springs from a flower bed, they have to bless the soil and curse the stones that stand on it.

One of his most brilliant chapters is on the Crusades, which [illegible]

What is at least as important for his immediate purpose, he has studied the drama of the past as thoroughly as he has mastered the drama of the present. He perceives the power of Sophocles as clearly and as keenly as he appreciates the power of Shakespeare; and he understands Molière as sympathetically as he does Victor Hugo. And this intimacy with the mighty masters of the past does not prevent his admiring the accomplishment of the playwrights of the present. He is awake to the charm of Rostand and to the appeal of Pinero, no less than to the cleverness of Mr. George M. Cohan. In other words, his preparation for dramatic criticism is far more than adequate; it is exceptionally ample. To this substantial equipment for his task he adds also the other three qualifications which a critic ought to possess — insight and sympathy and disinterestedness.

In this present volume he has given us a selection from the articles he wrote during the theatrical seasons of the last three years; and his thirty-two papers are evidence of the richness of the bill of fare proffered to the playgoers of New York. He discusses with his wonted acuteness Drinkwater's "Abraham Lincoln," Maeterlinck's "Betrothal," Benelli's "Jest," Gorki's "Night's Lodging" and O'Neill's "Beyond the Horizon." He analyzes the dramatic methods of Ibsen, Shaw, Brieux, Booth Tarkington, Alfred de Musset, Tolstoi and St. John Irvine. He estimates the acting of George Arliss, John Barrymore and Yvette Guilbert. He writes "In Praise of the Puppet Theatre," and also in praise of the Jewish Art Theatre. He finds occasion to stroll into the distant past to consider the drama of the Middle Ages and the tragedy of the Greeks. He reports an intimate conversation with Lord Dunsany, and he indulges in a threnody, which is also a rhapsody, over the grave of Rostand.

This catalogue of the topics which an American critic had occasion to deal with in the course of three Winters only is evidence of the unexampled variety of our stage today — a variety surpassing that of London or Paris — a variety which would have mightily astonished an American critic of the theatre a hundred years ago. Just as I have finished the reading of Mr. Hamilton's volume I chance to lay hands upon the "Works of Robert Treat Paine Junior, Esq.," published in Boston in 1812, and containing eight theatrical reviews now more than a century old. It is amusing and it is instructive to set by the side of Mr. Hamilton's catalogue of cosmopolitan achievements the meagre list of plays which Robert Treat Paine Junior, Esq., found worthy of criticism: "Adrian and Orilla," "Rule a Wife and Have a Wife," "Henry IV," "Venice Preserved," "Othello," "Pizarro," "George Barnwell" and "John Bull." I had thought that my acquaintance with the English dramatists was fairly wide, but "Adrian and Orilla" had never before swum within my ken. I knew by name, of course, and I had read "John Bull" and "Pizarro" and "Venice Preserved" and "George Barnwell" and "Rule a Wife and Have a Wife"—but no one of them has stalked palely on the stage in all my sixty years of playgoing. Of all the eight, the only two I have been privileged to behold in the theatre are "Othello" and "Henry IV."

As I read the list of eight plays, all of British manufacture, which had tempted Robert Treat Paine Junior, Esq., to pen his "critiques" (as his little papers are quaintly entitled), I found myself wondering how many of the plays, Greek and Scandinavian, Italian and Spanish, French and Russian, British and American, which Mr. Hamilton has brilliantly and entertainingly considered will be known to the readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES a hundred and ten years from now. Shakespeare's "Richard III." is safe to survive; and possibly a play or two of Ibsen's; but the rest? I fear that the rest is silence. But the readers of this review need not take thought of the morrow. These plays, gathered from the four quarters of the earth and from twenty-five centuries, are alive for us; and for us they are vital and vivid in Mr. Hamilton's pages.

Mr. Burns Mantle has given us a volume of another texture, with another purpose; and what he has given us will be welcomed by all who like to have the facts of theatrical history where they are immediately accessible. Mr. Mantle's subtitle describes his volume as the "Yearbook of the Drama in America." That is to say, he has here provided us with a record of the plays produced in New York in the season of 1919-1920. He has undertaken to do for this city what was done for London by the invaluable "Era Almanack," which began in 1869 and which is apparently now defunct, more's the pity. It is what was done for Paris by the charming little series of the "Almanach des Spectacles," which began in 1875, and by the "Annales du Théâtre et de la Musique," which began two or three years later. Prefaces were prepared for the successive volumes of the "Annales du Théâtre et de la Musique" by the leading writers of France; and one of these prefaces is the memorable paper in which Ferdinand Brunetière declared the "Law of the Drama," a bone of contention over which the theorists of the theatre are forever wrangling.

There is one daring novelty in Mr. Mantle's volume, none the less welcome because it is venturesome; in fact, it is likely to be the most attractive feature of the book to rural readers remote from the actual theatre and compelled to get their knowledge of the contemporary drama from the printed page. Mr. Mantle has been emboldened to select the ten best plays of the last season; and of these selected pieces he gives very full abstracts copiously reinforced by passages of the actual dialogue which he has been permitted to use by the courtesy of the authors. These ten plays are "Abraham Lincoln," "Beyond the Horizon," the "Famous Mrs. Fair," "Clarence," "Jane Clegg," "Adam and Eva," "Deciassée," "Wedding Bells," "The Jest," and "Mama's Affair"—one of them Italian, two British (one of them on an American theme), and the other seven American. As to at least five of the ten, there will be general acquiescence in Mr. Mantle's choice, and as to the other five there will be general diversity of opinion.

What Would You Do If You Were Twenty-One?

"WERE I twenty-one again," said William Maxwell, Vice-President of the Thomas A. Edison Company, in a recent interview, "I should do a great deal of reading. Six hours each week of serious reading is not much, but it may mean the difference between the $20,000 executive and the $25 a week clerk."

Great books have always made great men. In every line of endeavor—in literature, science, politics, and especially in modern business—you will find that the outstanding figures, the men whom we are wont to look upon as intellectual giants, are almost invariably great readers of good books.

And no age is too late to begin. No time is too short, no occupation is too mean, to be made to pay tribute to a real desire for knowledge. Men have become well read at the blacksmith's forge, at the printer's case, behind a grocer's counter. Even fifteen minutes a day spent over good books will give a man a wide education within a period of a year.

The Pocket University

With a Daily Reading Guide

This is one of the most remarkable educational movements ever started in this country. It was planned for men and women who were not able to go to college, but who still are ambitious enough to seek that wide culture and education which only a university can afford. It is a new and admirable plan that is already being taken advantage of by more than 10,000 serious-minded people throughout the country. It is more than "just another set of books." It is really a course in reading, compiled by many of the greatest educational experts of the country, and its uniqueness lies in the fact that it makes good reading systematic, yet pleasant and uplifting, as it should be. The Daily Reading Guide plans for you an easy and timely course of reading for every day in the year—only twenty minutes a day. The Pocket University is the only systematic course of reading that includes this remarkable feature.

Queries and Answers

Communications for these columns should be addressed to the Editor of Queries and Answers, NEW YORK TIMES. They should be written on one side of the paper only, and must contain the name and address of the writer as an evidence of good faith. Owing to the great demands on the columns, only queries of particular interest will be printed.

QUERIES.

A Dedication Ode

CONSTANT READER.—I believe it was at the dedication or the cornerstone laying of the Washington Monument that a poem was read—perhaps you may call it an ode—in which occur the following lines, which are probably incorrectly remembered:

Look up! the phantom clouds of gray,
Grim ghosts of storm have passed away;
And downward shines the welcome sun.

I would like to have the complete poem and know who the author is. I do not know where I can find a report, if there is such a thing, on the dedication of the Washington Monument.

The editor of Answers and Queries has had a diligent search made in the various Washington, D. C., archives for this poem, receiving the following report:

Search of original records at the Library of Congress today failed to discover the origin of the lines.

The inquiry indicated that perhaps these lines, or something approaching them, may have been part of a poem or ode read at the dedication of the Washington Monument or part of a poem that may have been written by "J. R. Trowbridge."

The investigation:

First—Whether Trowbridge wrote such a poem.

Second—Whether such a poem was read in connection with the dedication of the monument or at the laying of its cornerstone.

The collected poems of Trowbridge have been examined, but failed to show any approaching these. Those poems have been brought together in a volume entitled "The Poetical Works of John Townsend Trowbridge," published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., in 1908. The style of the lines given, until the author is found the that of some of Trowbridge's poems. The nearest approach to the lines is in one of his poems entitled "Lines Read from an Ode by Trowbridge, read at the dedication of the Bunker Hill Monument, Charlestown, Mass., June 17, 1857, which contains the following:

Long may the banner wave on it shell
The dawn of eve, the beams of morn
The light, for ever on it rest.

As to the second line of research, it is quite certain that no poem or ode was read at the cornerstone laying or the dedication of the Washington Monument.

The cornerstone was laid July 4, 1848. The record of the ceremony is complete. The file of The National Intelligencer, which was Joseph Gale's paper, for July, 1848, was consulted in the Library of Congress. A report of the ceremonies appeared in the issue of July 6, 1848. The issues immediately preceding and following that date also contain much matter relative to the ceremony. They show that the prayer at that ceremony was an oration by the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop of Massachusetts, a consecration prayer by the Rev. Mr. Mines, an address by Grand Master R. R. French of the Masonic fraternity of the District of Columbia, a patriotic song written by Robert Treat Paine, and a parade. The National Intelligencer contained nothing showing that a poem was read or that one was recited. "Oration of Robert C. Winthrop, Delivered 19th July, 1848, by order of the Washington National Monument Society, with introduction and appendix," and published by Gideon, the publisher, in Washington, contains nothing in regard to a poem being read. The "History of the Washington National Monument, by Hon. Joseph Harvey, Secretary of the Washington National Monument Society," published in Washington in 1903, also goes into the story of both the cornerstone laying and the subsequent dedication of the monument, neither of which was poetically commemorated. Another work consulted, "History of the Washington National Monument and Washington National Monument Society, by Harvey," published by the Government in 1903, about 600 pages, failed to show that a poem was read at the ceremonies.

The complete official story of the ceremonies is told in "The Dedication of the Washington National Monument, with the orations by Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, Hon. John W. Daniel, Jr., &c., published by order of Congress in 1885. This work was consulted. It gives all the addresses, the history of the Masonic ceremony, &c., and makes no reference to a poem being read.

Another work consulted was a "History and Description of Washington and the Adjacent Country, by Benson J. Lossing, published at the time of the subscription in 1859. Its title is "The Washington National Monument. The Memorial Stone Ornate. An Ode for the dedication, Feb. 22, 1855, the Rev. Horace Harris, author. Published by Horace Harris, Washington, 1855. Trade Supplied by the Washington News Company." This work contains a poem which covers twenty printed pages. This ode is not in the same style, nor in the meter of the sample given. Nor is there any part of the poem which conveys the same ideas as that found in the four lines. Various poetical works from the library's great collection of Washingtoniana were also consulted, but none of the Washington poems were found to contain the lines mentioned.

The editor is anxious to obtain an answer to this query, and hopes that some of the readers of the Queries and Answers columns will discover it.

John Daly Burk

A. C. GORDON JR.—Can any of your readers give me information as to where I may find some of the poems written by John Daly Burk, the Virginia historian? He wrote a number of fugitive pieces, among which was a poem called "Anna," but I have not been able to lay hands on any of them.

"David and Goliath"

R. P.—I am desirous of finding a poem in its entirety entitled "David and Goliath." It is humorous and in Irish dialect. It begins:—

Great Goliath, King of Kings,
David slew him with a sling.

"What I Have Seen"

T. J. G.—I should like to have some one place the following lines: "Go, see what I have seen, and feel what I have felt."

Fanny Hardaugh Downing

A. C. GORDON JR.—Can any of your readers tell me whether Mrs. Fanny Hardaugh Downing ever published a volume of poems? She wrote several novels, among which were "Nameless," "Pluto," "A Legend o. Catawba," &c., and a great many poems, but I do not know whether she ever collected the poems into book form.

An Indian Poem

M. J. HARMAN—Where can I find the author of the words following and the remaining part:

We ask an Indian brother, a warrior
How first among his people the triad tidings had been told.
How first the morning star arose on their being restless night
To those who sat in darkness were rejoicing in the light.
So he bowed his war spear and arrows he laid him down to rest
And slept as sweetly as a babe upon a mother breast.

Some Dreams!

J. J. GAFFNEY—Can any of your readers place the author of the following pieces: "The Abraam of the Country Actor on the Night of His Playing Hamlet," "The German Student's Dream," "The Dreams of a Rational Student, the Night of His First Dissection."

"The Bridegroom Sea"

L. D.—Can any one locate these lines:

The bridegroom sea
Is toying with
The shore, his
Wedded bride.
He decks her lawny
Brow with shells,
Retires to space,
To see how Fair she looks,
Then hurries home
Up to kiss her.

"The Charcoal Man"

E. M. R.—Can any one furnish me complete words of a poem entitled "The Charcoal Man"? Words in it run:

Perched high upon her wagon seat
Mark Haley drives along the street.
His scarred face fits rugged fits,
But still from men the oft he cries,
"Charcoal! Charcoal!"
While echo fakes and far replies,
"Hark-o! Hark-o!" &c.

ANSWERS

"Somebody's Mother"

MARY D. BRINE, New York—Noticing Florence Doroy's query of Jan. 9 regarding the poem "Somebody's Mother," I need say that I am the author of it. It appeared long ago in either Harper's Magazine or Weekly, I forget which. I was quite young at the time. The poem has been copied over and over again and was recited in a play called "The German Senator."

Boyd V. Jenks, Pittsburgh, Pa., writes that the complete poem is to be found in Volume 20 of Warner's "Readings and Recitations."

Catherine R. Turner, Mooresville, Ohio, informs us that it is in the Silver Gruenmar School Reader, Book One, published by Scott Foresman Company, New York.

"Wine of Cyprus"

HORATIO G. COXEENS, New York—Referring to the query of "A. H." in your issue of Jan. 2 as to identification of the lines beginning:

Go!—let others praise the Chian!
This is soft as Muses' string.

I would say that the same appear at the head of the seventh stanza of the poem by Elizabeth B. Browning entitled "Wine of Cyprus." It can be found in any complete collection of her poems.

"Mush, Mush"

MARJORIE C. DIVEN, New York—The song desired by H H Vines in your Jan. 9 issue may be found under the title "Mush, Mush" in "College Songs," published by Oliver Ditson Company, New York.

"It's Ballah" Again

JOHN S. GREY, New York—Your correspondent, Mr. Lee, is quite in error in your issue of Jan. 9. The song "It's English, Quite English, You Know," was never sung by Fred Leslie in "Monte Cristo Jr.," or any other play. It was originated by Henry E. Dixey, who made a feature of it in "Adonis" in 1886-87 in this country, and Dixey sang it in the Gaiety Theatre, London, for the latter year, impersonating Henry Irving at the time. It is recorded that Henry Irving attended one of the performances, and was asked, while the American actor was imitating him, what he thought of Dixey. Sir Henry replied: so goes the story—"It is not Dixey—it is Irving!" a magnificent tribute to our Henry's gift of impersonation. I am sorry to disagree with Mr. Lee, but Mr. Dixey will himself verify the truth of my statement.

Answers verifying Mr. Grey's statement have been received from Frank C. Drake, Brooklyn, N. Y.; William F. B. Pratt, Paterson, N. J.; "E. M. H.," Reading, Pa.; "R. F. E.," New York; W. K. Brice, New York; "R. S.," Brooklyn, N. Y.

"When Your Wife's Away"

PAGE EATON, New York—"Invitations Temptations," inquiries for by Leigh Clark in your issue of Jan. 9, is not the name of the poem, which is called "When Your Wife's Away," and was written by Henry Aylett Sampson of Richmond, Va. Mr. Sampson died last March, and a book of his verse, much of which is of a very high order, especially a sonnet cycle, has either appeared or is about to appear. It is issued by George H. Doran Company of this city, and is entitled "Sonnets and Other Poems," by Henry Aylett Sampson.

Answers to this query were received from Francis B. Hays, New York; Frank F. Richards, Boston, Mass.; Mrs. George S. Olsen, La Rue, N. Y.; Mrs. Evelyn Cable, New Haven, Conn.; Mary N. Stannard, Richmond, Va.

"Silent by the Shades"

JUSTINE GRIFFETH, Norwalk, Conn.—The poem inquired for by John R. Gollha in your issue of Jan. 9 is:

Silently the shades of evening
Gather round my lowly door;
Silently they bring before me
Faces I shall see no more.

Oh, the lost, the unforgotten,
Through the world be oft forgot;
Oh, the shrouded and the lonely,
In our hearts they perish not.

Living in the silent hours,
Where our spirits only blend;
They, unfettered with earthly trouble,
We still hoping for its end.

How such holy memories cluster,
Like the stars when storms are past.
Pointing us to that fair heaven,
We may hope to gain at last.

Plucking the Heart Out of Edwin Drood's Mystery

A Review by
T. R. YBARRA

THE MURDER OF EDWIN DROOD. Recounted by John Jasper. Being an Attempted Solution of the Mystery Based on Dickens's Manuscript and Memoranda. By Percy T. Carden. With an introduction by B. W. Matz. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1920.

IF spirits in other worlds can look down upon this terrestrial sphere and take due note of what is going on here, a great deal of amusement must have been extracted from this pastime by one spirit which, in its earthly incarnation, was known as Charles Dickens. Its ghostly sides must have shaken often with shadowy mirth; now and then a nebulous laugh must have issued from its disembodied throat, all because of the numerous and often fantastic attempts which have been made ever since Charles Dickens quit this earth to solve the problem of how he would have finished his last book, "The Mystery of Edwin Drood," had death not snatched him away when the story was in full swing and the denouement of its intricate plot completely hidden from readers.

Around "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" a whole literature has grown up. Famous men have racked their brains to answer the puzzle which Dickens left behind him when he died. Every word of the uncompleted story has been minutely studied. Tremendous significance has been attached to erasures and interlineations discovered in Dickens's own manuscript of "Edwin Drood." Chance annotations, casual remarks dropped by Dickens to acquaintances, have been dissected eagerly by "Droodists"; sage theories have been built upon them, each of which unravels the mystery to the entire satisfaction of its propounder. Several of the characters introduced by Dickens in the pages of "Edwin Drood" have been fastened upon as the murderer of the hero of the unfinished book. Half a dozen of the characters, including Edwin Drood himself, have been singled out as the individual posing as Datchery, the mysterious man who snoops around the cathedral town of Cloisterham, apparently collecting evidence regarding the disappearance of Edwin.

Andrew Lang has knit his brows over the great Dickensian mystery. So has Gilbert K. Chesterton, now lecturing in our midst of other things. So has Sir W. Robertson Nicoll. So have quite a little squad of additional eminent personages. They have ridiculed one another's theories, called one another rough names, and (doubtless) lost many a good night's sleep wondering how Dickens would have unraveled the only really tangled plot which he ever evolved. All of which, it is to be hoped, is productive of ghostly chuckles and cachinnations to Charles Dickens, disembodied in spirit.

If so, more of such ebullitions of mirth are due, for still another "Droodist" has had the intrepidity to enter the lists, in the person of Percy T. Carden, with still another "solution," with evidence which (it seems to him) sheds light on points in the mystery never before cleared up even by the most rabid investigators. Like others before him, Mr. Carden has ferreted out the original Dickens manuscript from its hiding place on the shelves of the Victoria and Albert Museum, in South Kensington, London, and subjected it to painstaking inspection. Unlike the other literary detectives who have delved around the mystery, this latest volunteer Sherlock Holmes has sought to strengthen his arguments by maps of Rochester (the town which Dickens, in the story, calls Cloisterham), taken by an airman-photographer from an airplane. Quite a new and daring departure in Droodism! About the only thing which the next investigator of the mystery can do to overshadow Mr. Carden's "stunt" is to secure an interview on Edwin Drood from the ghost of Charles Dickens himself!

All who know "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" will recall that it concerns the fortunes of a youth of that name who lived in the old English cathedral town of Cloisterham with his uncle, John Jasper. Edwin is to marry Rosa Bud, a sprightly young pupil at the highly correct school of Miss Twinkleton, by the express wish of their parents. To Cloisterham come two other young people, Neville Landless and his sister, Helena. Neville falls in love with Rosa and, as he resents Edwin's seeming indifference to her and lordly air of proprietorship, the two youths quarrel. Following a dinner of reconciliation between them at Jasper's house, Edwin Drood walks out into the Cloisterham streets in the midst of a violent storm and completely disappears. The last person to be seen with him is Neville Landless, with whom he had just quarreled—his rival for the affections of Rosa Bud. Damning evidence against Neville is produced by Jasper and Neville is arrested on suspicion of murder. But he is released from custody, owing to the absence of any real clue to his guilt. Jasper proposes to Rosa, who spurns him.

All this Dickens sets forth in the fragment of "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" which he completed, portraying the above-named characters and several others in true Dickensian fashion, dropping stray hints here and there which have been snapped up by some investigators as proofs of their theories regarding the disappearance of Edwin Drood and ridiculed by others holding conflicting theories as mere "blinds" ingeniously introduced by the author to catch just such unwary persons. Among the minor characters none has been the subject of such minute study as Datchery, the man of mystery who suddenly settles in Cloisterham after Edwin Drood's disappearance. Some think he is Helena Landless, disguised as a man in an endeavor to clear her brother from the suspicion of murder hanging over him. Others see in him Mr. Bazzard, the eccentric clerk of the eccentric Mr. Grewgious, Edwin's guardian. Mr. Carden now comes forward with the claim (advanced before, though seldom) that Datchery is Lieutenant Tartar, a naval officer, who comes in after Edwin Drood has vanished from the narrative.

Mr. Carden agrees with the bulk of "Droodists" in believing that Edwin was murdered by Jasper, his uncle, on account of the latter's passion for Rosa Bud, Edwin's betrothed. Jasper committed the murder, he thinks, while ignorant of the fact that Edwin and Rosa had broken off their engagement. As evidence of this he calls special attention to Jasper's horror, culminating in a swoon, when he learns this, after Edwin's disappearance, from Mr. Grewgious, Edwin's guardian.

Mr. Carden claims to have established one point which (he says) has eluded all other delvers into the Drood mystery, viz., the location of the house of Durdles, the drang-loving stone mason, who provides so much of the typically Dickensian local color to the unfinished mystery yarn. Mr. Carden went to Rochester to see it with his own eyes, and he has marked it on a map and caused his aid, the airman-photographer, to snap a picture of that part of the town where he located it. All of which, as any Droodist will admit (unless his theory is quite different), is most important in view of the incident of the quicklime and the spooky nocturnal visit of Jasper and Durdles to the crypt, to say nothing of its extremely important bearing (apparent at once to every Droodist, unless he has an unusual dislike idea) on the question of the grave of Mrs. Sapsea and the behavior of the headstone on the fateful night.

The other point which, according to Mr. Carden, he has cleared relates to that man with the mustache who is depicted on the cover of "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" as if he appeared suriatly until Dickens's death abruptly terminated the instalments. Now, that cover has been from the first one of the principal bones of contention in the great game of trying to find out what Dickens would have done had he lived to finish the story of Edwin Drood. Friendships have been shattered to pieces against that cover. "Droodists" have turned gray, they have gone insane poring over the pictures upon it.

Mr. Carden sorry not have turned gray and probably didn't go much studying the solid cover (though probably all Droodians might be found considered a mild form of harmless insanity), but, anyhow, he has studied it long enough to decide that the chap with the mustache is not Neville Landless. How did he know that Neville had mustaches? Why, indeed, when no other investigator had established this fact? Why Dickens (they thought) had left it without divulging whether Neville's face was or was not three sheets in the wind—there is where the fine hand of your true Droodist gets in his work. Let us hear Mr. Carden's mustache theory:

It has been suggested that the kneeling figure filming Rosa's hand is Jasper or else Tartar. But neither of these is shown elsewhere upon the cover and neither is the smallest figure. The only other figure in the picture is that of Edwin Drood himself, abruptly terminated this instalment. "Mystery of Edwin Drood," the Original Cover Design

As to the impressive figure with the long coat and tufted arms at the foot of the cover, Mr. Carden considers it to be Hobson Landless (or her man's figure, shown in the crypt, whither she had gone, according to his theory, to give Jasper some awful news when he went there to get the ring. (What! Don't you know about the ring? Shame on you, you are no Droodist!) Pursuing his theory, Mr. Carden considers the three figures climbing the winding stair to be Crisparkle, Lobby and Datchery (Tartar), shadowing the murderer, Jasper, up to the top of the Cathedral Tower, whence, according to Mr. Carden, Dickens intended to make Jasper try to escape his downward over the rough surface of the tower face, but in the end be being captured and handcuffed by his pursuers. To make all come out as should be, with due retribution for the wicked murderer, Mr. Carden shows Jasper in his cell on the night before he is to be hanged, writing a full confession of his crime.

Mr. Carden takes no special credit unto himself for having solved the mystery beyond cavil. In fact, he is quite modest about the whole matter, unlike some of the other players of the Edwin Drood game. His attitude toward the whole thing is charmingly summed up by him when he says in his preface: "The greatest danger in just the game should have an end, is a complete solution."

The Continued Story

By HENRY IRVING DODGE

MILLIGAN threw down the magazine in disgust. "Hang it all, I didn't know that was a continued story or I never would have begun on it. I hate 'em. I just got to where I could look for him in his arena and now I've got to wait a whole month to see what he's going to do next."

The editor of the Morning Clarion chuckled a bit, then: "Milligan, you and the other fellows that are always damning the continued story when we launch one—you're so inconsistent."

"I don't see how."

The editor blew several whiffs of blue smoke through his nose and mouth, as if, he'd shifted to another subject. "What papers have you got this morning?"

"All: Times, Sun, Post, Mail, Globe, Journal, World, Telegram. Haven't you have?"

"I only wanted to know why you have so many. Doesn't any one of them give you all the news?"

"Practically. But in a different way. I'm particularly interested in the case of that young ruffian that assaulted the old man up at 125th Street and Seventh Avenue, two or three days ago. They had him up before the Magistrate day before yesterday. The case was adjourned over to-day. I've been following it."

The editor picked up one of the papers and glanced at the item referred to. "It's the continued story," he observed. "Has the principal earmarks—brief synopsis of preceding circumstances for the benefit of those who see it today for the first time. Take any one of your papers there and see how many items it contains that do not refer to a beginning that was in yesterday's paper or the paper of the day before. You'll find precious few."

Milligan ran through the bundle quickly, then looked up with amazed surprise. "I'm blest if you aren't right."

"The newspapers live on the continued story," the editor went on, "just as the magazines do. It's necessary to their very existence. There aren't enough new things occurring every day to fill our columns, even if we should play them up to the limit. So we must string the interesting things that happened yesterday and the day before or last week along through today and into tomorrow or into next week if possible.

"Life itself is a continued story, laid down at night and taken up in the morning. The newspapers simply adopt the report of the continuous performance, serve it to the public hot off the griddle, as they say. Almost every day starts a serial with some new sensation: curious murders, conceived and executed by erratic persons with unaccountable motives; divorces of persons who have always been esteemed paragons of model virtue; or the eccentric creeping out in the most unexpected way of some real-life story that has disappeared suddenly, like an underground river, and run along only to come to the surface again, causes a sensation, then drop out of sight, while the whole public tries to figure out its devious subterranean windings and just when and where it'll reappear and what it'll bring to the surface with it—and buys papers.

"Take the Elwell case—a sensation for days, rife with speculation, both vain and sane, then silence. Everybody asks what is being done. Then a few more developments. Then the river drops again into the depths of mystery—' to be continued ' in the near future—possibly.

"Some of these real-life continued stories last a few days, others weeks or even months, principally because of their sensational, gripping quality. Others, again, not necessarily sensational, are absorbing because of the strong, picturesque, famous characters they carry along—Pershing, Clemenceau, the Tiger of France, a title gripping enough to hold any one.

"At the present writing we have two intensely interesting continued stories involving antithetically different characters—namely, Caruso and Monk Eastman. Everybody wants to know the circumstances attending the killing of the notorious gunman. Eastman was a thug, yet a man who seemed to have at least one redeeming quality—personal courage. His career was a lurid one, involving State's prison and winding up with a military funeral, at least itself peculiarly to dramatic exploitation. Also, everybody—operagoer and non-operagoer—scans the papers for news of the condition of Caruso.

"You see, Milligan, you and others who affect to hate the continued story in the magazines read daily instalments of many such for two or three months, stories which aggregate hundreds of thousands of words, and which no magazine could possibly publish inside of five years.

"The magazine continued story is usually well constructed up to a dramatic, an artistic, a satisfactory finish. But your newspaper continued story is not always so satisfactory. It often apparently comes to an end but is only—and most exasperatingly — suspended. Take the case of Dorothy Arnold. The girl disappeared some years ago, a search was kept up for months, the whole public hanging upon each new development as recorded in the newspapers, then the search was abandoned and the girl became nothing but a fading memory. Several years elapsed and the drama was resumed. A convict in a Rhode Island State Prison confessed that he was one of a trio of miscreants who had taken the body of a girl—whom he had reason to believe was Dorothy Arnold—and buried it somewhere near West Point. Instantly public interest was revived—but not the same quality of interest that was felt when it was believed that the girl was still alive, an interest of the brain rather than of the heart, an interest in the story rather than in the girl.

"We learned one day that Inspector Faurot was to dig for the body in the concrete cellar of a certain abandoned and ghostly mansion near West Point. From day to day we bought newspapers—all of them—for we felt that each reporter would describe the occurrence from his own viewpoint, that he would supply details or atmosphere that the others might omit. Well, Faurot dug. No result. The story was suspended again for a few days—then we read that the convict was to be taken to the alleged place of burial to point out the exact spot, and we hung with bated breath upon what the next development might be, and again bought all the newspapers. Everybody bought them, from clergymen to bartenders.

"The whole thing was like the revival of an old melodrama, with the importance of the characters shifted. The last protagonist was the Rhode Island convict. Every eye was on him. Again they dug. No result. The story—' to be continued.' Neither Poe, De Maupassant or Kipling ever schemed out a more weird tale.

"The success of the magazine and of the newspaper continued story as well is almost wholly due to man's love of the dramatic. One almost never sees a humorous serial. And the dramatic quality of the newspaper continued story is naturally enhanced from day to day, as circumstances and facts are dug up. That's what makes it a great story. The reporter has everything but his own skill furnished him. But the fiction writer must dig up his facts, create his characters out of his own consciousness. That's why his job is so much more difficult than that of the journalist. In still another way he is handicapped in the race with his reportorial brother. Truth, which is always stranger than fiction, is forever supplying the reporter with unbelievable sensations. To beat these and yet keep far within the limit of human credulity is a task that taxes the most ingenious fiction-writing brain. But it must be done, for the public, grown used to "strong medicine" in fact, must have even stronger medicine in fiction.

"The writer of fiction and the writer of fact are getting nearer and nearer together, each perhaps taking a leaf from the other's note book. The story writers are becoming more realistic and the reporters more literary. They are both getting to be more and more artistic. To illustrate—the fiction writers are making their characters more understandable. They are making their heroes less wholly heroic and their villains less wholly villainous. No one ever knew or could know how a real old-fashioned hero of fiction felt nor how a totally depraved villain felt, because there never was ' no such animal nohow.' Consequently, no one ever could appreciate the full dramatic quality of their acts under given conditions. The fiction writer is now allowing real, honest-to-goodness human traits to crop out in both his good man and his bad man, and they're all the more interesting for it. For you can starve the hauteur out of any patent-leathered, black-mustached Lunn, Jean Libbey villain, or you can make even her hero hungry enough to steal chickens.

"The reporter has the advantage of the romance writer in this, that he has a very severe critic in the editor, whose scissors are kept forever sharpened by a well-balanced, alert appreciation of the value of space and just what the public demands, and an everlasting pride in apt phrases and fine diction, whereas the romancer has few besides flatterers to turn to.

"The public cares for the story more than for the news. Suppose the papers should give but the bare facts of a crime, undecorated or ' played up ' by the skilful dramatists of the reportorial staffs. Public interest would be small. Why, do you ask, do we devote thousands of dollars' worth of space—column after column—to the literal report of a single trial? Simply because there is nothing more dramatic than words uttered on the witness stand. They most always have a portentous bearing. And so thoroughly does the editor appreciate this that he always sends his best men to report big cases and often employs famous fiction writers to play up local color and scenic effect.

"' Now, then, madam, tell us what you have done, how you have lived, since your marriage to B.—only such things as relate to this case '!

"Isn't that a great line with which to end the day's instalment of a divorce case?

"' Or in a murder case: ' Jane Williams, take the stand, please.' The oath is administered. ' On a certain night, what time did you retire? '

"' Nine, sir.'

"That seems simple, but it may be corroborative evidence of the most vital quality.

"' That's all,' says the counsel for the defense. The time for adjournment has arrived. The Judge nods to the clerk of the court. Jane is about to step down, when: ' One moment, please,' exclaims the prosecuting attorney. And the adroit reporter winds up with the suggestion that Jane has let herself in for a grueling cross-examination — tomorrow morning. The editor trumed to Milligan: ' Don't you think you'd have a bunch of tomorrow's evening papers? '

"Nor are the editors and the reporters the only dramatizers of the game of reporting facts. Counsel for both sides do their best to make the continued story of their activities sensational. How dramatic is the position of the counsel for the defense, how heroic. No matinee idol ever had half the chance that he has. Nor is that gentleman the only one interested in playing up a great criminal trial. The District Attorney must make capital out of it, political capital. Alone, austere, isolated from public sympathy, he stands there, the defender of the people—that's his pose. The continued story, with Whitman and Becker playing the leading parts, ran from day to day, long enough to put the District Attorney in the Gubernatorial chair and Becker in the electric chair.

"Among newspaper continued stories Bryan and Roosevelt were for a long time best sellers. For years and years they appeared every day in almost every paper of the country, and often two or three times in each issue. It would have been impossible to keep up public interest in these men unless they themselves had furnished enough material of dramatic quality to make good copy. Each lived an absorbingly interesting continued story, the big scenes of which occurred with each political campaign. In between they kept up a continuous performance, holding us by force of personality, dazzling us by brilliant versatility.

"Roosevelt dropped out of politics and went big game shooting in Africa. Then we saw him in a new rôle, plaintiff in a libel case. Next we see him in South America, expressing his restless, wonderfully adventurous and—to the public—fascinating spirit in hazardous exploration of untraveled lands and rivers. Then the doughty soldier, offering all for the country he loved above all things, and then—CURTAIN!

"The other headliner looms up on the dim horizon of memory like a horseman coming over the rim of the prairie and approaching—the boy orator of the Platte—holding aloft his cross of gold. Then candidate ad infinitum. Then—we jump to the recent past—Secretary of State, entertainer on the ' big grape juice time,' valiant knight of peace. What next? we wonder, and keep our pens alert and our presses ready.

"The newspaper continued story has a civic value in that it often checks crime and promotes beneficence. The recital of court procedure, the ever-flowing spring of supply and inspiration, the editor's best friend, has a repressive influence by keeping the penalty of crime always before the weak, would-be criminal element of the community. On the other hand, it is claimed by some criminologists that it encourages crime among the weak and the vain by exploiting it.

"If a man in whose case we are interested is arrested on Sunday or late at night, say, and is to be brought up in court next day, we all wait and watch and buy papers to see what is done to him. Our indignation at certain things makes us go out of our way to buy the paper and read the sequel. For that reason the street car toughs that are arrested on Sundays and tried on Mondays are the means of selling many evening papers, because we all love to see justice meted out to those we hate.

"Now for the humane influence: A poor family is evicted. We notice the fact and perhaps throw the paper aside. But tomorrow we read again of the same case. Some person has sent a little money to the unfortunate family and by suggestion we do likewise, and so it goes. Or the heart interest: Let a little girl lose her yellow dog and tens of thousands of persons will indulge in evening papers for days to see whether she found it or not.

"Everybody knows that the newspaper continued detective story is without a peer as a best seller. Few are more absorbing or more brilliantly told then was that of Commissioner George Dougherty's pursuit of the Rosenthal gunmen. From day to day the public followed the detectives up into New York State, down on Long Island, over to New Jersey, then across to Massachusetts and finally over to Williamsburg, where the gunmen were caught.

"So you see, Milligan, you fellows who kick at continued stories in the magazines spend ten times as much money buying continued stories in the newspapers. And not for the news half so much as for the continued stories."

Books and Authors

FROM Miss Eva Madden, sister of Mrs. George Madden Martin, comes the word that Margaret Steele Anderson, the original of Margaret in Mrs. Martin's "Emmy Lou," was recently burned to death in Louisville, Ky. Miss Anderson was talking with an invalid sister when her skirt was caught in the blaze of an open fire at her back. Assistance was brought through the chance telephoning to the house of Mrs. Martin, her lifelong friend, but not in time to save her life. Miss Anderson, for many years literary editor of The Louisville Evening Post, is the author of a small book of poems, singularly enough entitled "The Flame in the Wind."

Edith Wharton's "The Age of Innocence" is being read by the French in Le Revue des Deux Mondes, in which it is appearing serially. English critics of the novel have been unanimous in their praise of it as one of the finest of contemporary productions by an American.

At a recent meeting of the National Association of Book Publishers, John W. Hiltman of D. Appleton & Co. was chosen President of the organization for the following year. Joseph Lincoln, author of "The Portygee," was one of the speakers at the luncheon which followed the meeting. Frederic G. Melcher, Executive Secretary of the association, stated that the price of books would neither rise nor descend beyond the present level for some time to come.

Friends of the late Mrs. Humphry Ward in England recently appointed a committee from among themselves to raise funds for a memorial to the novelist who wrote "The Testing of Diana Mallory." During her lifetime Mrs. Ward was so devoted to furthering the welfare of children that it has now been decided to apply the funds collected to this social work to which she gave such ungrudging labor. In Mrs. Ward's "A Writer's Recollections," published in this country by Harper & Brothers, the novelist of English life tells of her early surroundings, of her many friendships with great literary figures, and of the writing of her own novels.

Harry A. Franck, the author of engaging travel books, cannot indulge his incorrigible wanderlust very much between now and the end of April. He has engaged to deliver lectures in many of the principal cities of Canada and the Eastern States during the next three months.

In 1910 the Trustees of Columbia University announced their intention to publish through the Columbia University Press a definitive and complete collection of John Milton's writings, both prose and poetry, Latin and English. The project was never carried through, but an announcement just received says that the volumes will begin to appear in 1922. They will be eight in number, and will be prepared under the general editorship of Professor W. P. Trent, assisted by Professors Erskine, Ayres, Haller, Patterson, Krapp and others. In addition to the standard library edition, the work will be published in a limited numbered edition, subscriptions for which will be placed on file in the order of their receipt, without financial responsibility to the subscriber. All communications concerning this edition should be addressed to Columbia University Press, Columbia University, New York.

In the review of S. Miles Boutoon's "And the Kaiser Abdicates," published in these columns in the issue of Jan. 2, attention was called to a table of contents, in which every chapter was misspaged, and to the absence of any index. A letter just received from The Yale University Press states that this faulty edition has been recalled and the table of contents straightened out, its intended effectiveness being restored with the correct pagination.

Readers interested in that remote, colorful day when the steamboat's whistle and the pilot's bell were heard constantly on the Mississippi will find many stories of that romantic period in the forthcoming issues of the Palimpsest, the little magazine devoted to Iowa history. Convinced that the heyday of the paddle wheel should not be allowed to drift into oblivion with nothing but the stories of Mark Twain and Beltrami to keep it bright, the editors have "dug up" these stories from obscure sources, and will publish them in the course of the coming year.

D. H. Lawrence's latest novel, "The Lost Girl," which is said to present this writer in an entirely new vein, appeared about a month ago in England and has already gone through three large editions there. Thomas Seltzer announces immediate publication of the book in this country.

Two books of fiction announced for immediate publication by Alfred A. Knopf are "Hlias," a collection of short stories by Katharine Mansfield, wife of the editor of the London Athenaeum, and "Debatable Ground," a novel by Miss G. B. Stern, which has been praisefully reviewed by English critics and to which H. G. Wells calls attention in "The Outline of History" (p. 606—Part 21), characterizing it as "a novel written with great insight."

"Dan" Beard, the Boy Scout leader and author of "The American Boy's Handy Book of Camplore and Woodcraft," which is published by the J. B. Lippincott Company, was not long ago crossing an icy spot in Flushing not far from a convent. Some one called out jokingly to him, "The wicked stand in slippery places?" Almost simultaneously "Uncle Dan" went down with a crash that would have laid up most septuagenarians. But the fall didn't even dislocate the Scoutmaster's repartee. From his seat on the sidewalk he retorted, "They may—but I don't know how in the blazes they do it."

Berton Braley, known chiefly as a writer of light verse, two volumes of which have been published, has written a novel which the publicity man for Hobbs-Merrill coyly informs us will be issued some time in the spring. The title is not announced, but the P. M. hopes it will be later.

Arthur B. Reeve, creator of Craig Kennedy, was recently sworn in as foreman of the Federal Grand Jury now sitting in Brooklyn. One New York paper was so surprised to learn that Mr. Kennedy lives in the Borough of Baby Carriages that it expressed its astonishment in a lengthy editorial. All of which is by way of being a preamble to the fact that Harper & Brothers will publish a new Craig Kennedy book next month.

A number of short love stories by Johan Bojer that show the author of "The Great Hunger" and "The Power of a Lie" in an unfamiliar mood will soon make their appearance in various American magazines.

A biography of Albert Einstein, written by Alexander Moszkowski and published in Germany, where the author is regarded as a philosopher, despite the fact that he is known abroad chiefly as a humorist, says that Einstein reads "Don Quixote" and Dostoievski's "The Brothers Karamasoff" over and over again, and that he prefers Shakespeare to Goethe. Einstein is presented as the proverbially stupid child, who was so slow about learning to talk that his parents took him to a specialist. It was not until he took up mathematics that he began to show unusual ability. The distinguished philosopher took lessons on the violin from Joachim. He improvises skillfully and has a tremendous admiration for Bach, Haydn and Mozart. For Wagner's compositions he cares little.

Mr. Howard Willard Cook, who has charge of the editorial department of Moffat, Yard & Co., will sail early in February for Christiania, Norway, to arrange with Johan Bojer and Mr. John Krag for an early American publication of an English translation of a new Bojer novel and of the works of Mr. Krag.

Mr. Cook will also complete arrangements for a novel by Jonas Lie.

In London Mr. Cook will be joined by Miss Rita Wellman, author of "The Wings of Desire," and will perfect plans with her for the publication in London and New York of her new novel, upon which she has been working in Italy during the last year.

Moffat, Yard & Co. have completed arrangements with a London publishing house whereby the newest books on psychoanalysis will be brought out simultaneously in this country and the English capital.

Democracy and Human Equation

are such as to make us consider whether our "rhapsodists," as Mr. Ireland calls them, are not false prophets whom it were dangerous to follow along the path of indiscriminate and excessive praise of every phase of our institutions. Certainly ours is the most rigid Government among the great free peoples. It is in some respects so inflexible as to inhibit for long periods the operation of the public will. It would not, of course, be made so irresponsive to the final authority by any creative act of today. We seem, however, in this respect to have so strong a prejudice in favor of the form that we do not see that we lose the substance. In this we are not free but bound.

Our author does a public service in telling how the "passion for legislation" leads us to amazing excesses, such as the passing of over forty-five thousand laws by all American Legislatures (State and national) in the five years ending with 1904. This is being a "Government of laws" in an unexpected, almost in a ridiculous, sense.

Mr. Ireland's suggestive book would be even more helpful if the opening chapters were not somewhat overdrawn. We get the impression of straining to make a case and of reasoning from what the author thinks must be the results of wrong conditions rather than from fully ascertained facts. The argument in question form is pushed to excess and to conclusions that seem at times overstated. But the approval of every thoughtful reader must be gladly given an author who has the courage to say that "very little consideration has thus far been given to that kind of falsehood which, by poisoning the well of truth, defiles the source of Government." This is a country in which public opinion is the final authority. That opinion is in largest part formed by reading the various public prints. This gives to the press of all kinds a position of great dignity and of equally grave responsibility. Whoever so conducts himself in this post of high service as to taint the stream of public opinion at its source is the ideal traitor. It is ill, indeed, to surrender by treason an army or a fortress, but it is a trifling ill and a petty treason compared with that wrought by one who for passion, profit, preferment, politics or any selfish cause poisons at its source the power which controls us all.

London Book Talk

LONDON, Jan. 20, 1921.

I HAD the pleasure of dining a few evenings ago with the members of the Johnson Club in the famous big top garret of 17 Gough Square, Fleet Street. This room extends entirely across the house. In it Dr. Johnson compiled his dictionary with the help of six assistants, five of whom, oddly enough, were Scots. But Johnson knew how to use Scots as well as to abuse them. No. 17 Gough Square is a very roomy house, and it is the only one of Dr. Johnson's London habitations left to us. A few years ago it was saved from destruction by Mr. Cecil Harmsworth, brother of Lord Northcliffe, and it is now a permanent Johnson museum and memorial. Some of its rooms can, under certain conditions, be hired for private parties, so that one can eat and drink in the old home of the lexicographer. Here he lived difficult years with his handsome, over-tidy and pragmatical wife, and here he deeply mourned her death and also the death of his mother. In this house he wrote nearly all his "Rambler" essays, and, just at the end of his tenancy, "Rasselas," which he completed in the evenings of one week.

The members of the Johnson Club meet twice a year to dine, to have a paper read, and to talk. On this occasion an admirable paper on Johnson as an Oxford student was our entertainment, and it was afterward discussed delightfully by Mr. Augustine Birrell, Sir Sidney Lee, Mr. Clement K. Shorter, Mr. J. M. Robertson and others. Sir John Simon was content to be an interested listener.

Since this pleasant evening a very interesting discovery concerning Dr. Johnson's ancestry has been made and communicated to The Times Literary Supplement by Mr. Aleyn Lyell Reade. Very little has been known about Johnson's descent on his father's side, and no one seems to have examined or disputed the statement of Stebbing Shaw, the historian of Staffordshire, that the Doctor's father, Michael Johnson, the Lichfield bookseller, was the first member of his family who "emerged from the obscure occupations of his family, who lived at Cubley as day-labourers."

Mr. Reade has made researches into the records of the Stationers' Company with surprising results. Johnson himself said, "I can hardly tell who was my grandfather." But the Stationers' Company has all this time, unknown to Johnson's editors, preserved the record of Michael Johnson's apprenticeship to one Richard Symons, and he it he is described as the son of William Johnson, late of Lichfield. So far from being a day-labourer William Johnson was a yeoman, entitled to be called "gentleman." Not only his son Michael, but his two other sons, Benjamin and Andrew, were also apprenticed to booksellers, so that Dr. Johnson was connected with bookselling through his father, two uncles, his brother, and at least one cousin. It is astonishing the facts set forth by Mr. Reade should have escaped Johnson's sleepiness native editor, the late Dr. Birkbeck Hill. It seems more than likely that still further information about Johnson's paternal line will soon be forthcoming. In a leading article The Times points out that if the methods of Darwin and Galton were more freely applied to literary genealogies a great deal of mystery about the evolution of genius might disappear, notably in the case of Shakespeare.

Apropos of literary discoveries, The Athenæum says:

> Research is in the air. Rumors are abroad of new literary discoveries of considerable importance; of suppressed Swinburne discoveries; of a forthcoming edition of Verlaine, with a host of new poems by him.

One of the haunting questions of antiquaries, literary and other, concerns the possibility that even now in old English country houses there may be manuscripts of amazing interest and importance lying in dust and neglect. This is the feeling that has just prompted the Essex Archæological Society to appeal to owners of country houses to make search for documents of whose existence under their roofs they may be quite unaware. It is impossible to dismiss the chance of a really great Shakespeare "find" even at this date.

I am not sure that it is profitable to speculate about "the future of the novel." In fiction, as in poetry, and in all spiritual experiences the wind bloweth where it listeth, and great births occur in the night. However, The London Pall Mall Gazette has been raising the question, and for answers has gone to several leading novelists. Their replies strike an uncertain note. Mr. J. D. Beresford "ventures to think that the tendency of the future will be away from realism, and that a revival of the stories of love, adventure, and mystery may be confidently expected. The real chance for the artist is in supplying the needs of phantasy which is the ordinary human being's escape from life."

Mr. W. B. Maxwell says that the novel has a future because novel-reading has become a national habit, but he prudently declines to predict the character of the novels of to-morrow.

Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins thinks that the two leading fiction interests of today, social unrest and feminine unrest, will be the note of the modern novel for some time to come. He, too, is cautious. "To prophesy the future of the novel is to prophesy the future of society." Mr. Eden Phillpotts is equally careful. "The novel must continue to be entertaining if it is to endure;" but who shall say what our children's children will regard as entertainment? Education is largely modifying the standards and amusement values, and science is confounding art. The novel must be brave and face tremendous adventures—chiefly down hill."

On this subject I was talking a few days ago to one of our most acute critics. Our thoughts did not run upon the lines of public demand but rather on the needs of fiction as a great art of literature. What the Novel seems to need more than anything else, we agreed, is centralization in human nature, and a breaking up of its departmental obsessions. The Novel of the Phase is too much with us: what we hunger for, perhaps without knowing it, is the big novel of human nature in terms of modern life. All this talk about what the public will want tomorrow is very well, but it pertains to questions of personal success and livelihood, not to art. It is the novel of all life, of the general struggle, and of the mass as against the mere type that is overdue.

Fielding, it is true, wrote in the first chapter of "Tom Jones" that a novelist is like "one who keeps a public ordinary, at which all persons are welcome for their money." And he goes on to talk about his readers as "customers" who are entitled to see his bill of fare. But all this is preliminary humor. When he produces his bill of fare it contains no brilliant dishes, no cunning specialties. "The provision, then, which we have here made, is no other than Human Nature." And as for specialties: "In reality, true nature is as difficult to be met with in authors, as the Bayonne train, or bologna sausage, is to be found in shops." And Sir Anthony Hope Hawkins is thinking much the same thing when he gently suggests that in the departmental, or "movement," school of fiction the characters are rather apt to become merely the creatures of the movements, and not real individuals themselves. That is to say, they go through a number of episodes and experiences which illustrate, often very cleverly, the trend of events and feelings, but they themselves are little more than passive recipients, and do not stand out as real people themselves."

Meanwhile the Novel of the Phase, the novel of special outlook, the novel that is too clever to be read for more than a few years, will be with us still. One that is sure of a welcome is Mr. E. F. Benson's third set of transactions with Dodo. We are to have this Spring "Dodo Wonders." For the present we must do the wondering ourselves. Mr. Benson, by the way, has now taken up his residence in Lamb House, Rye, so long the home of Henry James.

The Secret Corps

THE SECRET CORPS—A Tale of Intelligence" On All Fronts. By Captain Ferrand Thesiger. New York: Thomas Seltzer.

SINCE the author was a member of the British Intelligence Corps during the great war and knew so much about the system of espionage of his own country and others as a markedly bright man in his advantageous position would be likely to acquire, this volume has a value unsurpassed, if not unequaled, by any other that has dealt with the secret potential. All kinds of spies are described and many of the methods employed to learn of the movements of the enemy laid bare—all in a dramatic way that makes the book singularly fascinating. Thrilling situations are so frequent that one realizes more strongly than ever what an important and dangerous part in the war was played by the many "agents" of the Intelligence Corps, and how difficult it would have been to carry on the struggle at all without their aid. One feature of the espionage system of all the nations engaged in the war which is worth remarking is the important part played in it by women. They were the most useful agents employed, and they were drawn from all classes, including royalty at one extremity and many of the "lost sisterhood" at the other. Referring to a frequent complaint of the higher officials of the department that women systematically exaggerated their reports, "a common tendency with spies," the author goes on:

> It was a woman who gave away most of the French espionage system in Belgium in 1915, as a result of which sixty-six agents were arrested by the Germans and our Allies rendered largely dependent on British intelligences at a highly critical period. It would be idle now to trace the cause of this collapse other than to where it belongs—to the trial of Miss Cavell, with its third degree revelations extracted by the Germans.

Not only does this work give a more or less exhaustive résumé of the operations of the British Intelligence Department—only holding back those which might be of aid to an enemy in case of future wars or which might reflect unfairly upon more or less well known present-day figures—but it furnishes a story of the war as a whole which is deeply interesting as well as informative. In fact, any comprehensive history of the various campaigns which went to make up the "great show" would be incomplete without Captain Tuohy's authoritative contribution.

As the Debutante Tells It

More About Mrs. Grundy and Miss 1921

By HELEN BULLITT LOWRY.

THE débutante has gained new machinery for her campaign in the new liberty of 1921.

Overboard the chaperon has been dumped, thus rudely antiquating a thousand and one jokes. The formalities have gone to smash. The free-for-all "cut-in" dance holds sway in the marbiest of marble halls.

She can smoke with the men. She can drink from the male hip pocket. "After the ball," if many a heart is breaking, as they used to break in the last century, the heart's owner can tour Central Park en route home and patch up the break. All these unconventions, and more like them, does the year 1921 hold out to the new generation. Now the question is: Has the new machinery really simplified woman's age-old task of finding favor in man's eyes?

For answer I turn to the "debbies" themselves. Beneath the jazz and the "pep" and the hip-pocket cocktail I bore—beneath the unconcealed lip stick and the frank Freudian chatter, until I arrive at the heart of the débutante—say, for example, at the heart of Barbara—of Barbara the insolent, the courageous, the modern, the daring—the débutante of 1920-21. And so for a moment I turn the stage over to her.

"Oh, I'm glad I'm alive now and young now, instead of five years ago when the game was different," glows Barbara. "Even five years ago you poor old dears belonged to the Byronic period when man's love was of his life a thing apart and woman's whole existence.

"Now, you old dears weren't one bit more squeamish than we are—oh, I know. I had an older sister and I heard the crowd of your age talk, even if they did think I was too young to catch on. It was: 'How on earth can I keep Dick thinking I'm in love with him, if I don't see him this week?' But I just can't when Frank is in town.'

"Why, you girls didn't know what a frank friendship with a man was. You covered it over with sentimentality. It wasn't love and it wasn't friendship. It was an affair, and, what with a pseudo-engagement, it could be stretched out over a couple of years. What a bore!

"We have real friendships—promic if you will—and, when it pleases us, an occasional hour of fervid emotion that neither mistakes for love. When we're away in the Summer, we'll swim impersonally with a man, dive as well as he can, and then, if we please, go motoring with him that night. And neither is breaking the other's heart.

"And when we fall in love it is a mad, glorious thing that lasts just a month—or else terminates in marriage. No sentimental journeyings for a whole year! Ough!"

And, of course, the men enjoy it, adds Barbara, who frankly doesn't see how we ever held on to our men by the old antiquated methods. Nor does she see how we ever had enough beaux to go round at our tame parties.

"Think of the poky time you girls had with a chaperon always hanging around!" Barbara exclaims.

"Now you know no man wants a chaperon. Even if he's not a wild young thing, he doesn't like the idea that he's taking out a girl that somebody is watching over. And what pep can there be when there's some older person around all the time who would as like as not tell your mother that you had been smoking a pipe? Who wants people around anyway that are at the party but not of the party? Really, you know, old dear, chaperons are not—that's all there is about it. Nobody criticises you any more if you stay out motoring till five."

The reason they don't criticise it, as Barbara sees it, is because now débutantes are sophisticated enough to take care of themselves and everybody knows that they are. And it is the war that she thanks for her enlightenment.

"All of us sub-debs got our education in the canteens. We just naturally leaped out when we were 16, and now it's perfectly wonderful, because we haven't got to go through with that awful embarrassing time, our first season of finding ourselves and learning about men.

"You see, the whole thing is that you cannot learn anything except by experience. What you get from your mother is as antiquated as a leg o' mutton sleeve, and, frankly, I never got anything from my older sisters that wasn't deadwood. They fill you full of the old stuff about the kind of girl a man wants to marry. Oh, I do think we are the luckiest crowd of girls to have had the experience before we actually came out."

That is one débutante's view of the question, and probably represents the viewpoint of a considerable proportion of this younger generation. But again I bore under the surfaces of the "pep" and the lip salve and the psychoanalysis, and I discover that the new machinery, with all its new privileges, has also brought with it new complexes and new difficulties. It would seem that the popularity problem is no more solved for the débutante than is the labor problem for the purchaser of an electric washing machine who discovers to her dismay that it is merely a change from washing the clothes to washing out the washing machine that has got dirty washing the clothes.

Take the one seemingly unimportant detail of the "break-in" dance, which has migrated from the college towns with all its informalities. On its face value it relieves the girl of making out a program.

"But I think the 'break-in' is a rather nice thing," remarks a kindly older woman, "for if a girl isn't popular nobody can tell it, because somebody is dancing with her anyway."

"Oh, can't they?" cries her youthful relative. "If a girl gets hung up, it goes down the stag line like a shot."

So it's up to the girl to look popular—to look popular at any price. One New York débutante, as pretty and vivacious as eye could desire, tells of entering a ballroom alone, to discover no acquaintances near her. The hostess in time brought up a man. "Have a toddle?" asked the man—which, it seems, is now the approved method of inviting a lady to dance.

"You're a débutante, aren't you?" asked the partner, after a few minutes of toddling. The girl nodded. "How did you know?"

"Because you're so nervous and because you keep watching the stag line."

The débutante looked him straight in the eye. "You'd look at the stag line, too, if you didn't see but two men in the room that you know and they were going out of the door."

At which he broke into raillery at women, and debbies in particular. "All you girls want is to be broken in on every two-step by a lot of lounge lizards."

"Then what would you advise?" she asked, sweetly.

"And do you know," she smiled as she told me the tale, "he didn't have anything to offer about the men not caring if we were hung up. All he could suggest was that I never go to a dance without two escorts—in other words, carry my entertainment with me. They all of them make fun of us for caring if we're hung up—and they'll none of them come near us if we are."

The men are equally illogical. One of them said to me the other day that he didn't like the new sort of girls.

"Then," asked I eagerly, "when you are at the débutante dances, you prefer dancing with the demure and proper sort?"

The young man hesitated—then blushed. "To tell the truth, when there is so much of the free stuff and the hip-pocket drinks going the rounds, you get in the wrong mood to appreciate a nice girl."

This, in a nutshell, is the problem that confronts the young girl who wishes to play the popularity game by the old rules. One such "nice girl" talked with me—a slim young lark-eyed creature who belongs to a New York family of sufficient prestige to have insured her dazzling success in the old days, when the mothers controlled the machinery. This young girl has come out in the new era, when the mother's influence seems to end with the invitation to the dance or the dinner, while the daughter's technique must begin at the ballroom door.

"Whenever our little crowd of girls gets together," she muses, "it seems that we always get to talking about the popularity of the girls that are what we call the brisk crowd. Then some one of us asks, 'How long will they last?' Not much longer,' the rest of us laugh back. But down in our hearts we don't know.

"Sometimes I feel," she adds, earnestly, "that this year will be the year that decides which type will survive as the typical American girl. Men have always told us—for centuries they have told us—that they want the kind of girl that knows how to behave herself when it comes down to choosing their real friends and their wives." Her voice grew a bit bitter. On her face I seemed to read the memory of being hung up at a dance. "Well, I guess this year will see the survival of the fittest."

"And how does the race stand now?" I ask her.

She answers, thoughtfully. "In the mid-week dances the brisk crowd has it all over us. In the Saturday night dances we get our innings, because a harder-working crowd of men and college boys come then—and not merely the boys that are burning the candle so at both ends that they have to keep drinking to keep going.

"But no matter how nice a man is, if you get started wrong—you know, hung up the first dance—he won't rescue you. What do you suppose makes men at dances different from other times?" she asks suddenly, the wisdom of the ages dawning in her eighteen-year-old eyes. "You read in stories about men being kind to down-and-out girls, but they won't any of them rescue a hung-up girl.

"We try to beat the game by combining. If you have a man presented to you, have an understanding with four or five girls that you'll exchange. But sometimes the men are so rude that we can't."

A post-deb, who has been out for several seasons, yet still takes an active part in New York society, says in answer to my questions:

"I somehow feel that we women have been awfully stupid as a class to let the game get so out of our hands. We've demanded liberty, and now they seem forcing it upon us, whether we want it or not. Have you read 'This Side of Paradise,' which treats of the new débutante? It is hard to play the popularity game by the old rules. And yet I don't want to be laid on the shelf."

Yet, for all its disadvantages, the new machinery would perhaps receive approval from a large number of debbies for the all-sufficient reason that it turns out more popular girls," said less outstanding belles. As with the introduction of all mechanical, quantitative production the outcome—even if the qualitative production may have slumped. The very type of dancing—that anyone can learn to do sufficiently well after they once get the knack—has the tendency to turn out a ballroom full of good dancers instead of [illegible]

"Northerners are always asking me about the Southern belle," continues a Southern "débutante." "There is not a Kentucky belle extant. Girls either have a good time and then they go around, or else they don't have a good time, and then they have some enough to stay in. It all depends on whether they have pep."

So, even south of the Mason and Dixon line, in the land where eighteen white years was formerly synonymous with spinsterhood, pep has become the present day voltage of popularity.

"But, what is this mysterious quality of pep?" I ask of the Younger Generation. And these are some of the answers that I receive:

"It means being willing to do anything that turns up any hour of the night, from taking a 3 A. M. swim in the ocean to taking a dip to turn a hemstring."

"It means the girl doing all the entertaining and talking so that some spoiled man can loaf."

"It means doing everything that the crowd does—your history, being good sport."

"It certainly doesn't mean being pretty, but it does necessitate being smart."

"It means taking three cups of coffee before a dance, even if you know that you won't get a wink of sleep that night," comments a débutante, darkly.

"It means a look of physical exuberance and good health, so that you don't get tired."

Anyway, "pep" is what all of them, the men and the girls, say that a girl must have if she'd be a success. And "pep," it would seem, is the standardized product that the new machinery for popularity is turning out like a Ford plant. Beauty may have been once the code language for attractiveness. Charm may have had its day. But now it is "pep." And, as this is a quality that can be artificially manufactured, who will dare say that the number of social successes in the greater today than in the days when beauty and charm counted for everything?

"But sometimes the men are so rude that we can't"

"If a girl gets hung up, it goes down the stag line like a shot."

"Main Street" Through the Ages

A Review by
C. EDWARD MORRIS

OLD VILLAGE LIFE. By P. H. Ditchfield, M. A., F. S. A. With forty illustrations and plans. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $3.50.

MAIN STREET, which Mr. Sinclair Lewis's novel of that title has made a synonym for spiritual stagnation, is not merely the epitome of our Middle Western civilization. We are the inhabitants of Gopher Prairie characteristic of any one country clime, nor of any particular era. There have always been Main Streets—everywhere—and the make-up of the men and women who have lived along them has never fundamentally changed with time or place.

Carroll Kennicotts have done battle with nearly every small town that has ever grown up, changing, Don Quixote-like, the windmills of aesthetic, larger and intellectual impoverishment, but they have always been outnumbered by the Widow Bogarts a thousand to one. And defeat has always been their lot. It is, alas! the better part of valor for the individual of cultured sensibilities to save himself spiritual sickness by giving a wide berth to all Gopher Prairies.

An appalling poverty of spiritual life has always blanketed Main Street, according to a scholar of Oxford College, Oxford, who has studied the life of English villagers in all ages and has reconstructed a panorama of its development in "Old Village Life." The picture requires close scrutiny on the reader's part, for the pigment with which it is painted comes from the storehouse of archaeological learning. But, like an old oil painting which "comes out" from the canvas with the aid of restoratives, the book repays the close attention: it shows us not only the houses in which ancient villagers lived, but also, with imagination's aid, something of how they worked and played. The customs and traditions of these villagers of an elder day are illuminating of their way of life, but the surest key to their characters is found in the author's descriptions of their pastimes. To know what a man does with his leisure is to understand what manner of man he is.

Dr. Ditchfield, who is rector of Fordham, in Berkshire, is primarily concerned in his book with the economic condition of English townships, but he gives the reader many glimpses of the social life of the Main Streets of many ages. "Village life," he succinctly remarks in his opening chapter, "is sometimes very dull and monotonous." Whether he would alter it in exact conformity with Carroll Kennicott's ideals is somewhat doubtful. Intelligent reconstruction of rural life, he believes, cannot be accomplished until those who are devising for improvement build the new order on the old foundations:

> Though the modern reformers seem to fix their eyes on the construction of garden cities that are deemed to be earthly Paradises, he says in his preface, it is worth while to discover how the old village communities lived and prospered in ancient days, and to learn how to graft new branches upon the aged trunks. Such trees may produce better fruit than quite new seedlings.

Any reader of Mr. Lewis's novel who has felt something approaching despair for the future of small town life will be almost equally depressed by the series of pictures presented by Dr. Ditchfield. Contemplation of them is almost certain to make him look forward to the Main Street of a century hence with the conviction that it will be about as stultified a place of residence then as Mr. Lewis's portrait shows it to be now. This is doubly true if the reader believes that the history of the future is to be read in the pages of the past.

We read, for example:

> As we roam through Britain in the Roman period, examining its towns and villages, we discover abundant evidence of a widely diffused culture among Britons as among Romans during at least the last half of the Roman occupation—a culture which in certain respects far more nearly resembles that of modern times than in almost any of the intervening period.

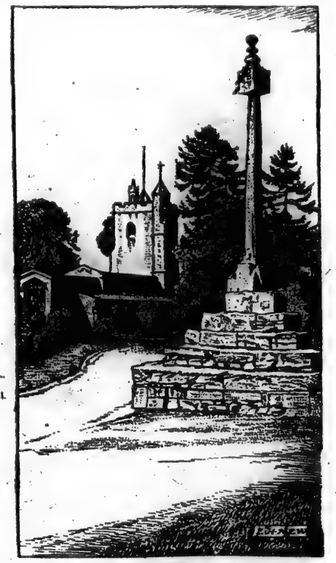
The last phrase of the quotation, in which the italics are our own, refers to an age nearly two thousand years dead. The progress of the intervening centuries has produced

View of Great Tew, Oxfordshire.

And when the long nights fell and Winter cold set in the slaves heaped higher the charcoal in the praefurnium, and the master sat in rooms far better warmed than many a country house is now, or sunned himself at midday in the sheltered triangle or strolled in the warm side of the colonnade among the gay stucco and fluted columns. If he was a scholar he studied Virgil, and gathered useful information from the Georgics with regard to his farming.

Surely, this ancient villager—who the author assures us was often a native Briton—does not sufer when his surroundings and pursuits are compared with those, for instance, of the druggist of Gopher Prairie, driving up before his hideous home in a chugging Ford.

The longer we look through Dr. Ditchfield's eyes at the Main Streets of other ages in England the further the balance seems to incline toward the credit side of village life in bygone centuries. Not only the Roman in his villa, but also the Saxon thane and the Norman lord, the monk at their country grange, the Tudor and Stuart husbandmen—all these are shown to have lived lives no less admirable than those of any of Sinclair Lewis's characters. There is no escaping the blasting fact that villagers of no time or place have ever attained to a very high level of esthetic life, but some of them seem at least to have had within them both the desire and the capacity for self-entertainment of a not wholly sordid sort.



East Hagbourne Village.

"Old Village Life," by P. H. Ditchfield.

In the Saxon villages bards and gleemen were ever welcome guests, who used to delight the company by their songs and stories of the gallant deeds of their ancestors, the weird legends of their gods, Woden and Thor; their Viking lays and Norse sagas and sometimes acrobats and dancers astonished them with their strange postures.

Writing of life in these villages after the Norman Conquest Dr. Ditchfield says:

> We like to picture the life of the inhabitants of these primitive manor houses, the lady sitting with her maids working their tapestry with figures of swans and beasts and ships and heroes, the playing of games in the courtyard, the men returning from their hunting, feasting in the hall, the minstrels and jogglers contributing to their amusement, the former chanting "The Song of Roland" and other stirring lays of romance and war.

During the fifteenth century, the author tells us, the villagers used to act miracle plays on holiday occasions, "very badly perhaps"; and almost every village had its company of players who visited neighboring towns and gave performances there. Then there were the "church ales," when the church wardens bought and received malt and hops, which they brewed into a light sweet beverage, and sold to the villagers. "There was a large amount of gayety in the villages in those days," comments the author, and then adds "life is dull enough in some villages nowadays."

Good times were never more frequent, perhaps, than in the Elizabethan days, when boisterous jollities of all kinds helped to make England a "Merrie England" indeed. There were constant "merry nights" in barns, where the rustics danced to the cheerful tune of pipe and fiddle and such games as "chasing the whistle" were played. Special festivals came at flax-breaking time and at the flowering of the maripits.

Then Thomas Cartwright began his invectives against Sunday games and Merrie England was very sad. The minstrels sang no more, even the bells in the church tower were silent, except for service. No more dancing on the village green, no more sports and merry-makings. To rise to the Briggsian vernacular, "Somebody's always taking the joy out of life," and "The 'good old days' were bunk."

In the eighteenth century it became usual to form church bands or village orchestras. These were very popular, "though the music they produced was a little trying."

The closing chapter of "Old Village Life," which brings the reader down to the nineteenth century and modern times, tells how new life and animation were brought to town and hamlet by the development of good roads. "Travelers lodged in the village inns, and the familiar figures of the cheery coachman and the sound of the guard's horn startled the peace." Hard times and Puritanism had damped the old-fashioned merriment of rural life, and church ales were things of the past, but the love of games and amusements natural to English folk revived somewhat.

Such amusements as are referred to above may not be of tremendous cultural worth, but do they not compare to the esthetic advantage with the Saturday night movie of Gopher Prairie or with the tawdry vaudeville and burlesque show of slightly more populous towns? And who would exchange a Middle Western church "sociable" for a "church ale"?

It must be kept in mind, too, that these villagers never knew anything like the material prosperity of Mr. Lewis's small town folk. Perhaps that fact is irrelevant; somewhere in "Routledge Rides Alone" Will Levington Comfort has several particularly eloquent pages in which he expresses the belief that the people of India have grown spiritually finer, largely because they have been starved so much. It is an entertaining speculation—that plain living and high thinking consistently travel in opposite directions.

Villagers of all ages have had men to scourge them for their absorption in material affairs. Carroll Kennicott railed no more violently against the incessant buying and selling, trading and dealing of Gopher Prairie than did Adam Bede against

Alfred Noyes, Balladist

COLLECTED POEMS. By Alfred Noyes. New York: Frederick A. Stokes. $2.50.

MANY poets have had reason to be grateful for the revival of interest in poetry in the last decade. Alfred Noyes has gained little by it. When he first began to write he was hailed by critics as the poet of the period. Then the styles changed, suddenly, and other reviewers began to say all that could be said against his work and much more than was just.

Mr. Noyes is not the great poet of a period that has produced Edwin Arlington Robinson, Robert Frost, John Masefield, Walter de la Mare and others as important. But it would be absurd to say that he has not his own place and that he has done nothing worth while. He has.

Nature and Apollo intended that he should spend his life making ballads; not deadly sermons in verse, but ballads; not philosophical dissertations in verse, but ballads; not prosy criticisms in verse, but ballads—In other words, ballads. Whenever he writes sermons and dissertations and criticisms in verse he fails. Whenever he writes ballads he succeeds.

Nature and Apollo equipped his mind for this work. They made him an admirable story-teller. They taught him how to use light, graceful, charmingly fluent rhythms. They gave him a pleasant fancy. They provided him with the usual, normal, conventional emotions of mankind. With this endowment, it is no wonder that he has delighted sane people with "Forty Singing Seamen," "The Highwayman" and other jolly stories in verse.

If we can judge by his work, Nature and Apollo did not equip him with epic power, with critical acumen, with great intellectual profundity, with the passion of Keats. Therefore "Drake" was not an epoch-making poem, therefore the critical verse included in this third volume of his collected poems makes the discerning sigh for Pope, therefore many of his subjective lyrics have too much sweetness and too little strength.

But it is ill-natured to blame a poet for not being what he is not, especially when his achievement in his own proper sphere is real and important. Radical critics and poets might study Mr. Noyes's ballads to good advantage. In this third volume a number of the best are included.

We find in it his vigorous story of Niagara, an old Indian legend fluently retold, "The River of Stars." "Cap'n Storm-Along" is admirable, of course, with the rousing lines,

> Bashing the seas to a welter of white,
> Look at the fleet that he leads to the fight,
> O, they're dancing like witches to open the ball;
> And old Cap'n Storm-Along's lord of 'em all.

"The Lord of Misrule," whatever one may think of the ideas in it, has a ringing and triumphant rhythm of the kind that can be made only with sincerity.

> "At Paske began our morrice
> And, ere Pentecost, our May;
> Because, albeit your words be true,
> You know not what you say.
> You chatter in church like jackdaws,
> Words that would wake the dead,
> Were there one breath of life in you,
> One drop of blood," he said.
> "He died and He went down to hell!
> You know not what you mean.
> Our rafters were of green fir. Also > our beds were green.
> But out of the mouth of a fool, a fool, before the darkness fall,
> We tell you He is risen again,
> The Lord of Life is risen again,
> The boughs put forth their tender buds, and Love is Lord of all!"

Mr. Noyes does more for the world, I believe, when he gives it clean, stirring, freshly imagined ballads like these than when, with the most praiseworthy intentions, he puts into verse "Five Criticisms" (or more) of modern literature and modern life. It is quite true that modern life and literature need to be criticised. But the best criticism of life, and the finest refutation of criticism, is a new and beautiful creation wrought out in accordance with a poet's own natural quality.

However that may be, there are a few other poems in this volume for which we should thank Mr. Noyes notably "Old Gray Squirrel," the pathetic "Court Martial" and "A Victory Dance," a poem righteously and refreshingly bitter.

turers, have usually come because they are genuine sport lovers. Usually such women have been of the leisure class, those who could afford to have suitable costumes made. After that, if the costume were sufficiently becoming, it was a landslide. The hard-pressed pretty girl artists began to use it on their cover designs. The hard-pressed fiction writers introduced it in their short stories for the popular priced magazines. First it was the tennis girl; lately it has been the aero maid.

However, from a Methodist Church in Pittsburgh come words to remind us of what was once woman's sphere and that woman's chief charm was to be a sensitive plant. "It was a degradation to the womanhood of America to think that Anne Morgan should degrade herself into auctioning off seats for a prizefight," says the voice of this ministerial authority.

In spite of this timely warning, the twentieth century continues to destroy one by one the nineteenth century's sweet Tennysonian sensibilities.

"After all," points out a woman who was shocked to find that when she attended her first fight she wasn't shocked at all. "Didn't we pretend to those old sensibilities a little, anyway, because we thought the men liked it? I've a strong suspicion that fainting with grace was the scientific sport of that period. Just think of the practice bouts it required before the mirror."

Gridiron Coaching

In "Winning Foot Ball," William W. Roper, who coached the 1919 Princeton football team, which tied Harvard and defeated Yale, tells in breezy fashion how a football team is built up from the first day of practice to the day of the season's "big game." The author has been football player, fan and coach for twenty-five years. In his book he unfolds his knowledge of the game in a manner designed to help the prep school player and the university coach, and to entertain the great mass of people who enjoy the sport from the side lines. A few of the chapter headings are "Modern Football a Battle of Wits," "The Spirit Behind the Team," "Every Man in Every Play," "The Kicking Game" and "A Real Quarter Back Must Have Brains." The book is generously illustrated with photographs, many of them showing in action the Princeton team which the author coached. (Dodd, Mead & Co.)

mor, who finds romance and happiness at the end. Jasper has a keen sense of truth, an unswerving devotion to principle; Ruby and Peter are just an ordinary girl and boy, not very intelligent, not very heroic, susceptible to their training and environment; only Amber has any sense of any one else's viewpoint, any real consideration for other people. But there they are, all together; and there, trying—with the exception of Amber—to dominate instead of to understand each other, they live.

It is always easy to attack the criticism of any extreme by saying that the other extreme may be just as bad. But Mrs. Webb is not arguing against discipline. For all the house's harsh tyrannies, the Darke children are not the victims of too much real discipline; in the right sense of wise and sympathetic education, their trouble is that they have not had discipline enough. A sounder criticism of "The House in Dormer Forest" is that the author is driven by her idea, that her individuals and incidents alike are open to the charge of exaggeration. But the story remains a forceful presentation, set against a haunting natural background. Inasmuch as the theme somewhat suggests "The Way of All Flesh" anyway, one is conscious, however, of a certain irritation with Mrs. Webb for calling her curate Ernest!

THE FIRST SIR PERCY

THE FIRST SIR PERCY. By the Baroness Orczy. George H. Doran Company. $2.

THE story of that first Sir Percy Blakeney, who was, so we are told, the original of Frans Hals's famous portrait, "The Laughing Cavalier," as well as the ancestor of that very gallant gentleman known as "The Scarlet Pimpernel," is continued in this new and very lively romance by the Baroness Orczy, which bears his name. When the novel opens, it would seem that Sir Percy, once known only as Diogenes, penniless soldier of fortune, was one of the happiest and luckiest of men. Young, rich, handsome and of noble birth, honored by Maurice of Nassau, Stadtholder of the United Provinces, whose life he had saved, and about to receive as his bride the lovely Gilda Beresteyn whom he adored, what could be possibly have left to wish for? But in fiction, as in fact, the Goddess of Chance is a tricksy minx, who takes a mischievous delight in tripping and throwing her apparent favorites, even at the moment when they seem to be standing at the height of her favor. The greater the height the greater the fall. And surely that was a terrible fall, indeed, which brought the erstwhile gay and gallant Sir Percy as a blind beggar, liable to be hanged at any moment, into that self-same hall where scarcely one short week before he had sat at his splendid bridal feast, the admired of all women, the envied of most men.

Of course the changeful goddess presently ceased to frown on Sir Percy, and partly because of his own daring, readiness of wit and abundance of resources, and partly because of the loyalty and courage of his young wife Gilda, happiness has become theirs by the time the last page of the book is reached. But meanwhile they both have to face imminent danger, and that more times than a few, while the stanch little Dutch Republic passes through a perilous period of its stormy history. Maurice of Nassau, the Stadtholder of the United Provinces, plays an important part in the story, which gives an interesting sketch of a time less popular with romancers in general than are those earlier days when the hosts of Alva carried fire and sword through the devoted land. It is not the armies of Alva, but those of the Archduchess Isabella, which are threatening the Netherlands at the date of this novel, and though its villain, the Lord of Stoutenburg, is a very villainous villain indeed, a man of "an entirely warped and evil nature," he does not destroy, neither does he pillage the helpless town that surrenders to him. Nevertheless, its inhabitants had troubles in plenty, and the stalwart Burgomaster of 1624, who was Gilda's father, was almost as sorely tried and proved himself to be of as stanch a courage as those other Burgomasters who in 1914 so valiantly confronted the Hun. The story is well told, it moves swiftly and has several dramatic and exciting moments. The Baroness Orczy's many admirers will thoroughly enjoy this latest tale of the adventures which befell "The First Sir Percy."

'THUVIA, MAID OF MARS

THUVIA, MAID OF MARS. By Edgar Rice Burroughs. Illustrated. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co.

FANTASY with a vengeance is what characterizes this tale of the warriors of Mars, and one woman, Thuvia, Princess of Plarth. Whether because of her "shapely shoulders," or in spite of her queenly mien, the lady is abducted, ruthlessly, thievingly and somewhat thrillingly. For, instead of being carried off in an earthbound brown and white or a Rolls-Royce, she "was lifted in strong arms and borne to the deck of the flier. * * * A sudden whirl of propellers, the rushing of air against her body," and lo! Thuvia and her captor, Astok, Prince of Dusar, are off toward Aanthor, a dead city of ancient Mars.

Martian kingdoms evidently do not differ from our own in the matter of diplomatic nuptials, and the Princess Thuvia, after the manner of our own blue blood, is betrothed to a nobleman whom she does not love. But mark the triangle. Neither does she love her abductor, although a little obstacle like unrequited love does not serve as a cold douche to a "Martial" passion. Astok simply felt, fell and flew, taking the "shapely shoulders" with him.

Had he known anything about the honorable descendants of American men, and particularly those that hail from Virginia, he might have known better. Readers of the other Martian books by the same author will recall John Carter, the Virginian, who became Warlord of Mars, and it is none other than the half-Martian son of the Virginian who loves, is beloved by, and pursues the abducted Princess.

Battles royal result—clashing of arms in hand-to-hand combats with red and green warriors, monsters, and "otherealists"; fights in air boats; descents into caverns on suddenly sinking floors, and other strangely remarkable experiences. Indeed, the labors of Hercules were as child's play compared with the adventurous ordeals of this knight of modern mythology.

To say that the book is at all times intelligible would be stretching a point, although it may be that continued activity on this mundane sphere unfits a reviewer from following Mr. Burroughs in these Martian peeps. Besides, events move so quickly and are so intertwined that the reader unconsciously develops a "head." It is then that the telling illustrations serve their suggestive purpose. The thought occurs as to whether the author intended this book to serve as a humorous biological solution to the supposedly warlike proclivities of inhabitants of Mars. It would seem that the female, Thuvia, reigned supreme in her nebulous kingdom; at least no hint is given as to the existence of competitors in or about the planet Mars. With only one lady, and she of "shapely shoulders," how could the planetary gentlemen refrain from being in a constant stew?

Marjorie and Sir Walter Scott.

From the Title Page of Farnie's "Pet Marjorie."

Marjorie and Hilda, Child Poets of Two Centuries

MARJORIE FLEMING'S BOOK. The Story of Pet Marjorie, Together with Her Journals and Her Letters. By L. MacBean, to which is added "Marjorie Fleming." By John Brown, M. D. Introduction by Clifford Smyth. Modern Library Series. Illustrated. New York: Boni & Liveright. 95 cents.

WHEN is an unusual child a "prodigy" and when is it not a prodigy? The term is getting to be more and more loosely applied to any child who rises above the dead level of mediocrity, with very great unfairness to nearly all of them. For when thus used the word connotes always something fearsome, something little if at all short of monstrosity. And yet the children who exhibit unusual gifts in their childhood are very likely to be normal, happy, winsome little ones, not in the least like that popular conception of a "prodigy." Why not, instead of speaking of them as if they were something near akin to the monstrous, consider them as children upon whom the good fairies of life have smiled just a little more benignly than upon those less fortunate, whom they have made just a little more sensitive to beauty?

The whole question, which has not received a tithe of the scientific and also the popular attention to which it is entitled, comes up anew with the simultaneous publication of this volume about Marjorie Fleming and the winning of a prize for her poetry by Hilda Conkling. These two little girls, separated by a century of time, stand out prominently among the multitude of gifted children by reason of the fine quality of their endowments and the strength and lovableness of their personalities. Marjorie's place in the gallery of gifted and adorable childhood is secure, for she has held it for more than a century, winning to love of her all who have come to know her by the vestiges of herself which she left strewed along her short pathway, just as she did all who knew her during her brief lifetime. But Hilda came modestly forth from her domestic circle less than a year ago with a volume of "Poems by a Little Girl," introduced to the public and warmly welcomed to the association of all true poets by no less a poet and critic than Amy Lowell. And now comes this new poetical achievement, whereby she wins the prize offered by the Touchstone Magazine for the best poem submitted for its February issue, among a host of competitors numbering some of the best known poets of the country. In striking contrast to Sir Walter Scott's "Pet Marjorie" in both personality and gifts, it seems that Hilda Conkling is yet entitled in both those endowments to take her place beside that little maid in the gallery of gifted and lovable children.

The publishers of the Modern Library Series deserve the gratitude of a host of readers for thus bringing together anew all that is known about the little girl of whom Sir Leslie Stephen says, in the paragraph devoted to her in the Dictionary of National Biography: "Pet Marjorie's life is probably the shortest to be recorded in these volumes, and she is one of the most charming characters." Fifty years ago Dr. John Brown wrote a tiny booklet about her called "Marjorie Fleming: A Story of Child Life Fifty Years Ago," in which he revealed something of her personality, told the story of her life and of her picturesque friendship with Sir Walter Scott and quoted some of her poems. His little volume has been called "The best book about a child that ever was written." But the narrative that was written by L. MacBean for the Centenary Memorial to Marjorie in 1903, after the discovery of her complete diaries and poems among the papers of a younger branch of her family, makes a full-length picture. It contains practically all of her writings, with a full account of the doings of the little maid during all her short life. With Mr. Smyth's introduction, the neat volume presents the story of one of the most interesting children of all time.

In the introduction a comparison is drawn between Marjorie and Hilda Conkling:

> In what Marjorie wrote there is nothing quite so finished, so mature in thought, so delicately imaginative, as one finds, for instance, in much of little Hilda Conkling's verse. Nor, for sustained humor and narrative excellence, can Marjorie's "Diary" bear comparison with Daisy Ashford's justly famous romance. Nevertheless, gifted as are these two child writers of our own day, we don't fall unreservedly in love with them as we do with Scott's Marjorie. It is her waywardness, her delicious medley of contradictions, her sudden passions, her solemn assurance that she "has been very more like a young devil than a creature," her ardent friendship, her lapses into unexpected moods of moralizing, that tinge everything she writes with her own colorful personality, and make one long to snatch her up and hug her—as one does with any normal child whose attractiveness is wholly unconscious and who appears no older than she really is.

The introduction concludes that it was by reason of her rich and colorful and strong personality rather more than by her literary gifts that Marjorie Fleming has so charmed men and women for more than a hundred years.

It was the innate romance of Marjorie's personality that appealed to Sir Walter, just as it is bound to appeal to those men and women of the twentieth century who are fortunate enough to read her book. This personality of hers is, indeed, the real secret of Marjorie Fleming's assured place in our hearts. * * * Marjorie and her book remain for all generations the Eternal Child.

Marjorie Fleming was born in 1803 and died in 1811, when she was a few days short of being nine years old. It was 100 years after her death that Hilda Conkling was born. This twentieth century little girl was just a little past nine when her book of "Poems" was published last Spring and won the admiring attention of many lovers of good literature. Separated by a century of time, by all that that astounding century has meant to the thought and feeling of humanity, and by wide reaches of difference in individual temperament, the two children are yet enough alike, although so constrastingly dissimilar, as to make study of them and their talents very engaging and suggestive. Their striking literary gifts have little in common and their temperaments are as widely dissimilar, but they are both normal and wholesome children, lovable little girls, the heart of each one bubbling over with love for those about her and for the wild things of earth and air, both servants and worshippers of beauty and both reaching out to find expression of their full and happy hearts in words. Hilda's new achievement is even more notable than her book of poems, since it was the triumphant result of competition with adult poets.

The Touchstone announced in its December number the inauguration of a poetry department, to be edited by Marguerite Wilkinson, poet and critic, in which would be offered every month a prize of $50 for the best poem or group of short poems submitted in competition. The first award appears in the February issue and it was won by little Hilda Conkling with a group of half a dozen short poems, although nearly a hundred poets, many of them well known, competed for the prize. Mrs. Wilkinson read and judged the poems and chose the winning group, all without any knowledge as to the author of any of them. The manuscripts were sent anonymously, accompanied by sealed envelopes on which were the titles of the poems and within which were the names and addresses of the authors. Mrs. Wilkinson did not even see the envelopes in which the manuscripts were sent lest so small a thing as the postmark might give her an inkling of the identity of the author. She prefaces the winning poems in the February Touchstone with this brief criticism, written before she knew who was the author:

> "String of Beads and Petals," a group of poems in unrhymed cadences, wins the first of the prizes offered by The Touchstone. These poems are not remarkable for depth of thought or for richness of rhythm. We like them for the rare freshness of imagination in them, for their delicacy, spontaneity, whimsicality and intuitive sense of magic.

Several of the half dozen poems sing of flowers and gardens and the out of doors. One, longer than the others, is a quaint and charming conceit about "The Old Brass Pot." The poems "Time" and "Wild Tulip" are also well worth quoting:

THE OLD BRASS POT

The old brass pot in the corner
Shines and scowls at the kitchen pans.
Like a stubborn king
He sits and frowns . . .
Orders them about
When I'm not looking.
He was a gift from the fairy queen . . .
What can I do?
He boils rice when I want it.
Makes broth when it is needed;
He is magic
But he growls all day.
Without him it would be pleasant and comfortable
In my little cottage
With wistaria growing over the open windows . . .
What can I do?

He tells the frying pan
To stay on its hook . . .
He shouts at the other pans
In a gruff voice . . .
They all might be so happy
In my cozy kitchen!
Tell me—but you must whisper—
What can I do?

WILD TULIP

Mottled like the tiger-lily leaf,
With black necklace clinging,
(Of course it has a green cloak!)
God has made a tulip.
He made the glacier like a moving jewel,
He made the tulip,
Like a red cloud lighted by the sun.
I wonder how it feels to make a flower
Or a glacier like a great dream?

Author of "Poems by a Little Girl."

TIME

Time is a harp
That plays to you till you fall asleep;
You are always spending it away
Like a music . . .
Suddenly you are left alone
On a trail of wind.

The mountains were asleep
Long ago!
Listen . . . the tune is changing . . .
Do you hear it?
You will sleep too
Before long . . .

These new poems, added to the evidence given by her book, of which Amy Lowell says in her introduction, "I know of no other instance in which such really beautiful poetry has been written by a child," prove Hilda to be an unusually gifted little girl. But those who know her say that she is in all but this endowment just a sweet, wholesome, gentle and winsome little maid who is having just such a beautiful, happy childhood as any mother could wish for her children. Mrs. Wilkinson, who is a friend of Hilda's mother, thus described for THE NEW YORK TIMES BOOK REVIEW AND MAGAZINE the child's home life and the conditions under which the poems are written, or, rather, told, for their birth is spontaneous and almost unconscious:

> "Hilda and her sister, who is two years her senior, and their mother live in a charming house in Northampton, Mass., whose big studio, living room, attractive with books and pictures and flowers, is also the play room for the children when they are not at school or out of doors. There is a large, old-fashioned New England 'yard,' whose flowers and trees, butterflies, birds and brook Hilda celebrates in her poems. Miss Conkling is Assistant Professor of English at Smith College and the two little girls met the literary and professional people who come and are guests of their mother, while their playmates are the children of the friends. Thus all of Hilda's environment makes for that refinement of feeling and delicacy of imagination which mark her poems. Mrs. Conkling is herself a poet of fine quality and also a musician, and so possesses the child owes is heavenly the poetic gift and her instinct for rhythm.
> "Nothing could be more spontaneous and unconscious than the way in which her poems come into being. She began when she was only 4 years old, and in her book one can watch the gradual unfolding of intelligence and feeling, the widening of her mental horizon from year to year, through the six years of poetic creation that it covers. And yet most of these poems has been as deliberate a piece of work. Perhaps she comes dancing up to her mother's side saying, 'Mother, here is something I've made for you,' and repeats the lines of a new poem, which afterward her mother writes down. Or perhaps Mrs. Conkling listens while Hilda, absorbed in her play, talks or sings little verses to herself and writes them down without the child's being aware that any one has paid the least attention. When Hilda's book was published, she knew nothing about it until it was an accomplished fact. When she saw it the book interested and pleased her for a very short time and then apparently she forgot all about it. Hilda's older sister, who is about 11 years old, says that she wants to be an architect and takes keen interest in making scrapbooks of pictures of buildings that please her."

Miss Wilkinson agrees with Miss Lowell in the latter's estimate, expressed in her preface to the "Poems by a Little Girl," of the value of the mother's companionship in Hilda's development. Miss Lowell says:

> And here I think we have the answer to the way of Hilda. Mrs. Conkling and her sister have been their mother's close companions ever since they were born. They have never known that, somewhat equivocal relationship—a child with its nurse. They have never been for hours at a time in contact with an elementary intelligence. * * * Hilda's mother, for instance, in her poems reveal one thing more than another it is that Mrs. Conkling has delivered with an admirable tact.

Mrs. Wilkinson does not think that in any right and just and desirable state of society there would be anything remarkable in the fact that a little girl of 9 could make lovely poems. "These currents of the love of beauty, of the desire to create beautiful things, run constantly," she said, "through all humanity, but there is so little in our ordinary life to encourage their expression, even to make it possible, and so much to repress and kill all natural love for beauty, that we have no idea how much a part of everyday, into which things might become. If civilizations were what it ought to be, nobody would consider Hilda in the least unusual."

ut of the Mouths of Babes

the mare, presenting me at the side of the cab.

Thomas's face stopped stretching itself vertically and began slowly to spread horizontally into a delightful smile of greeting. I felt flattered and still more hopeful. The friendly smile broadened to a grin. He began to gurgle. Finally, he threw back his head and roared with laughter.

"The doctor says you had better go," the mare whispered firmly. "He says he's afraid of the baby having hysterics. It might choke."

I went away into the country. I had to. From the pastoral peace of fair farms and babbling brooks I wrote my children their first letters. Full they were, these letters of fluent fancies—teeming with tremendous thoughts for tiny tots.

In reply I heard that the letters had been listened to by my offspring with amused attention, and had produced a giggle or two. But the general feeling was that they were not up to my usual level of humor. On being put into the babies' hands they had been diligently searched for pictures. Would I please see to it that in future all my epistles be illustrated. If my correspondence failed in this regard it would probably not be read.

"But," I expostulated to the babbling brook, "I am but an artist in words, even as thou, diminutive Neander, art master of naught save the wayward music of thy wandering wetness. It is true, I used to draw on the blotting paper at school—faces and galgs mostly. But that seems a very incomplete equipment."

Then I went to see an artist friend of mine.

"Tell me," I said, when he had done swearing at me for interrupting his work, "to be an artist, does one have to be able to draw everything perfectly? I mean, can all real artists draw anything they like?"

"No, of course, they can't, you silly ass," said he in a pitying, chummy sort of way. "The secret of being an artist is to draw only the things you can draw, and never to be caught drawing the things you can't. That's what people mean when they say 'true art conceals art'—conceal the things you can't draw. Get the idea? Go away. I'm busy this morning."

"Just a minute," I said. "Listen: I can draw faces and pigs. Would that be enough to make me an artist?"

"Certainly it would—if you can only draw them well enough. Lots of fellows in the game can't draw as much as that. Pigs, personally, I've never been able to draw to save my life. My pigs always look like sofa cushions. But I am perfectly great at lampposts and grandfather clocks. I do wish you'd go away."

"I'll come again tomorrow," I said. "And I'll bring you some pigs."

I went back to my farm and wrote the children another letter. It contained a story about pigs. It was a serious story—whimsical and bizarre, no doubt, but serious—And I illustrated it—again, seriously. The pigs were all perfectly proportioned: portly, porcine and proper.

The next day I took the letter to my friend. He was as busy and as grouchy as ever. But finally I managed to pry him off his easel long enough to look at my pigs.

I expected a serious, intelligent criticism of my work. He was a famous artist, deservedly famous, and I felt that if any one could tell good drawing from bad he would be the man. To my horror he became inarticulate. He rocked and guffawed till the studio skylight rattled.

"Are they as bad as that?" I asked.

Then he read the story and promptly went off into renewed gales of hilarity.

"Bad!" he roared, when he finally regained breath enough to speak. "Man, they're funny! I never saw such pigs. How lucky your children are to have such a scream for a father."

"I didn't mean the pictures to be funny," I said. "Really, I didn't."

"Get out," he said. "You'll be the death of me yet."

"No, listen," I said, "stop making a fool of me. Won't you please tell me if these pigs are good pigs or bad pigs? That's what I want to know."

"It doesn't matter a darn if they are good, bad or indifferent. They're funny. And so are you. Take them away and get them published." And he pushed me gently but firmly into the street.

Dazed, mystified and melancholy, I walked back in the direction of the brook. On the way I noticed a trim figure sitting on a stile. I couldn't help but notice her, because the hero of my last novel had noticed a trim figure sitting on a stile in just that same way. Besides, I wanted to get over the stile.

I stepped behind a hedge and surveyed her keenly through the interlacing hawthorns. Yes, 'twas she, Amanda Braithwaite, the sculptress! In the happy past Amanda and I had been old flames until I went and spoiled it by getting married. I had not seen her in years. But, at the sight of her trim figure sitting on the stile, a vision of all the things I had missed, a perfect panorama of wonderful might-have-beens, rushed upon me with overwhelming force. Would she have forgotten me after all these years? No—of course not. How could she? It must have been Fate that had thrown us together like this at the moment of my soul's greatest struggle.

I needed her. Perhaps she needed me. Delightful thought! I would have speech with her. And yet—was I not a husband and a father of a family? True, but I was a misunderstood husband, and a still more misunderstood father, while as an artist I was apparently so totally incomprehensible that I did not even understand myself. Never in the whole history of the inner lives of great men was a little dalliance with a trim figure on a stile more excusable. Besides, it was highly probable that Amanda needed me. (And when had I, in fiction or fact, ever left a lady in distress?) I would find out. Straightening my tie, I stepped briskly from behind the hedge.

"Gosh!—Hullos, Bob," said she. "For the love of Michael, how you scared me! I thought you were a bull."

She seemed to have grown heartier with the years. She was still very good-looking—and trim, but heartier, almost bluff.

"You seem very glum," she went on, without giving me a moment's chance to pour out my heart to her in the manner I had planned. "What's that you've got under your arm—the beginnings of a new book? Let me see it."

"I'd rather not," I said. "It's nothing of any great importance. And nobody seems to understand it, anyway—nor me, either. I am almost at the end of my tether. Listen, Amanda, do you remember that day in June when—"

Then she just leaned over and plucked the manuscript from under my arm. She had certainly grown a lot heartier. She looked at the pictures and read the letter, and then did precisely what I had feared she would—nearly fell off the stile laughing.

"What do you think of the pigs' anatomy?" I asked, hoping to sober her.

"They haven't got any anatomy—that's what makes them so funny. You are going to publish this, of course?"

"Certainly not," I said. "It's a letter to my children."

"Oh, have you some children? Fancy that! Well, from this—you certainly understand children."

"There's nobody more ignorant of children than I am," I said, firmly. "I don't understand them and they don't understand me."

"And it's so funny," she continued, turning the pages. "Really, Bob, it's excellent. Quite new. I had no idea you had it in you. You will become a great humorist."

"But I don't want to be, and I can't be a humorist," I almost screamed. "I am a serious writer. This letter isn't meant to be funny; it is a plain juvenile narrative. The drawings aren't meant to be funny; they are meant to be pigs. I don't want to be funny myself. I've tried and it doesn't work. It doesn't come natural to me."

"Don't you worry about that," she said in an odd way. "You're funny all right. Now listen: you've been wasting your time. If you'll promise me to be a good little funny writer, instead of a bad big serious one, I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll chisel a monument to set over your grave when you die, and I'll do my darnedest to make it the best thing I've ever done. I'll put laughing children around it, yes, and gamboling pigs—though they won't be as good as your pigs.

"I'm not joking. I believe in tombstones being cheerful. Something tells me that this letter is going to be the beginning of great things from you. Pigs are your metier. And you shall have pigs around your epitaph. Why not? People have lions and greyhounds on their tombs. I'll do my very best for you, Bob, just because you spent your time trying to buck people up, instead of wringing their souls with sob stuff. It is the greatest thing in the world to make people laugh. While I was sitting here I was just thinking what a sad, silly place the world was, when your face appeared around the hedge."

"I felt intuitively that you needed me," I put in hopefully.

"I sure did," said she. "You've cheered me up no end. Now land

some, appalling picture, but those who have looked even a little into the accredited histories of that time will know that it is not in the least exaggerated. The small boy of seven, indentured for fourteen years to the owner of one of the most brutally managed of these slave-driving factories, and the family of which he is later on the founder, furnish the central personal interest. He is originally a gentle, attractive, promising little chap and the author shows him gradually brutalized and dulled by his years of oppression into a man very different from what he would have been under the surroundings that childhood ought to have.

Grown to manhood, this young man toils, saves, enslaves others, becomes a factory owner and a rich man. But he is not nearly so brutal as were those who despoiled his youth. His son, who takes up his work, improves somewhat in humanity upon his father, but the iron is still in his blood and it is not until the third generation comes on the scene that any real endeavor is made to tame the "monster" and utilize its service without allowing it to destroy greater values than it produces.

Mr. Bleackley's novel is a piece of thoughtful and careful work which deserves the attention of those many readers who like their fiction to give them something to think about. There is in it accurate knowledge of England's industrial history and the long panorama in which its development is presented unfolds personal drama in abundance and also teems with the larger events of the times of each generation, the efforts to bring about industrial reforms, the corn law agitations, the works of such famous men as Cobden, Bright, Gladstone, Mr. Bleackley has brought back to vivid life each of his three generations and presented on a broad and busy canvas a moving picture of this long procession of years. One may doubt, as he comes to the end of it, that the "monster" was really as well "tamed" away back in the eighteen-eighties as he seems to think, although, doubtless, a beginning had been made. Nevertheless, it is a novel that was well worth writing and well worth the reading of any one who is interested in its theme.

BIG-TOWN ROUND UP

THE BIG-TOWN ROUND-UP. By William MacLeod Raine. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $2.

I'M going to ride down Broadway and shoot up the town," said Clay Lindsay, cattleman, to the boys of the B-in-a-Box ranch in Arizona, and, as he was always a man of his word, he did it. The tale of how he did it is a first-rate tale, too, from the moment that he snatched Miss Beatrice Whitford, mining magnate's daughter, from under the hoofs of a charging steer—which was really what gave him the idea of doing it, for this young lady came from New York—to that other when he left New York for his own beloved Southwestern country with this same lady under his charge for life. But of course between those two moments much, very much, happened.

Clay Lindsay was a live wire. "He's a sure-enough go-getter, Clay is, every jump of the road," was how Johnny Green put it, and if Johnny was Clay's perfect satellite, his adulation was not altogether blind. Said Johnny further: "The bronco never was built that can pile him, nor the man that can lick him," and this was no exaggeration, else how could Clay have got the better of Jerry Durand, ex-prize-fighter and gang leader, whom he began by throwing off the train on the way to the metropolis and ended by nearly, if not quite, sending to Sing Sing for the term of his natural life?

The trouble began over a round, soft little person who was on her way to the great city from Bush, Col., to act in the movies, and this same little person was the cause also of a lot of trouble between Clay Lindsay and Miss Beatrice. But at the bottom of all these troubles was another and deeper one, to wit, that Clay burst into the lawless East as a peace-loving citizen from the law-abiding West and never got the hang of the Eastern civilization. But because he had a magnificent physique and the knack of handling a revolver, because he was hard as nails, quick of wit, and honest and open as his own Arizona plains, he was able to take on at their own game the bold, bad men of "the biggest city of the biggest, freest country on God's green footstool," and to beat them at it.

Mr. Raine has written many another good story of the West, which he knows so well, but he will find it hard to beat this one. Clay Lindsay, clothed in all the vivid colors of Arizona, shines out like a modern New World Don Quixote among the gunmen and gangsters of New York, but instead of tilting uselessly at windmills with old-fashioned weapons, he rescues forlorn maidens by the strength of his good right arm. He is altogether a most efficient and effective knight errant. He has his wisdom and his philosophy too, as witness his reflections, brief and to the point, on the queer and devious ways of the East. So that when finally he goes off again to his own country, he leaves a distinct void in New York. The reader will be sorry, and no more could be said in praise of "The Big-Town Round-Up."

IN CLAY AND BRONZE

IN CLAY AND BRONZE. A Study in Personality. By Brinsley MacNamara. New York: Dreatone's.

WITH a relentlessly truthful note, verified by the evident familiarity of the author with his subject, there is here presented a picture of the Irish peasant, in his virtues, vices, strength and weakness, which only the later school of Celtic writers has given to the world. We see, in Martin Duignan, the farmer's son, born and brought up amid the sordidities of his poor cabin home in the boreen, the possibilities of great achievement, which, unfortunately, carry with them the loss of much of the native nobility of the man of the soil in Ireland. There is no question that Martin is one of the most forceful and clear-cut characters dominating a novel that has come into print this season. He is always alive, from the days when he shuffles into the cabin at night, mud-caked, surly and weary, after a hard day in the clay with his primitive plow, to those in which he is a player in the Tower company in Dublin, which devotes itself to presenting Irish plays racy of the soil, afterward when he fights for a poor living among the struggling fourth-rate actors who haunt the agencies around Times Square, and later when he has written his successful novel only to find that with that triumph he has lost his freshness of soul and the capacity of loving a true woman. Through all these vicissitudes, in the course of which he is transformed from the primitive, roughly wholesome clodhopper into the cynical student of human nature in whom his inherent kindness of heart has been dulled by the sheen of a sneering world, Martin is always the live, earnest man, never the lay-figure which he might become in the hands of any other than a master craftsman. We know him at once at our first meeting, and always our sympathies are with him as he stumbles along in his efforts to reach the light that shall reveal him—to himself as well as others—as the man who we know from the beginning could not be held down to the clay.

There are other good characters besides Martin Duignan. His illiterate mother, narrowed by her wretched life and the constant companionship of a drunken husband and others of his kind, until the husband dies and leaves her only Martin and his pretty sister Brigid. Then there is Brigid herself, frivolous, youthfully selfish and fond of dancing, who comes to her natural fate at the hands of the caddish clerk at the Union, and who is made again into an "honest" woman as the wife of a loutish farmer who marries her for her land. Also the parish priest—exceedingly well drawn—the good-humored Father Clarke, and a collection of heavy, porter-drinking, scandalizing clods who spend their evenings at Widow Kelly's "pub," and are generally racy of the soil. Exceedingly well sketched is a group of unpublished poets, novelists and playwrights, which gathers in a drinking-place in Dublin, and where Martin, who has left the country, intending to study for an exciseman, meets them after he has been accepted as an actor in the Tower company because he plays peasants with the fidelity of one to the manner born. These are convincingly presented. In fact, the word "convincing" may be taken as the keynote of the whole book. The author has a firm touch, whether in his half-veiled humor—in which, as is common in Irish stories, there is always the hint of a slowly dropping tear—or in the tragedy that envelops it in a mist that has all the beauty of unconscious romanticism. "In Clay and Bronze" is really a remarkable novel.

IN DORMER FOREST

THE HOUSE IN DORMER FOREST. By Mary Webb. New York: George H. Doran Company.

WE have novels a-plenty that deal with the difficulties of marriage, the pressure upon each other of two lives close tied. We have fiction, too, that focuses in the "parents and children problem." And, in numbers very much smaller than the specific studies of friction between husbands and wives, we have a few stories that take up the problems of a more general group, of group pressure itself. Such a story is "The House in Dormer Forest," in which the author of "Gone to Earth" and "The Golden Arrow" presents what in perhaps the cruelest of all forced associations, the unloving family.

Let us state at the outset that "The House in Dormer Forest" is a very interesting story, that it introduces us to an original and likable heroine who finds happiness at the story's end, and that its touches of "nature," both in scenery and atmosphere, are forceful and haunting. Primarily it is a picture of a group of people, some of them fine but immature, some of them selfish and scheming, some of them merely undisciplined, who live together in a household unhallowed by sympathy, by consideration, by companionship. It is a study of forced conformities instead of wise self-controls, of sanctimonious uncharity, of the worship of form and the ignoring of substance. It is a presentation of untrammeled egotism developed inevitably from the suppression of normal individuality. In a few sentences set down in the course of telling her story the author states the novel's theme:

> A crowd of people shut up together in one house, one creed, one strait view of life, must eventually wear each other out. Good nature is ground down by constant friction. Hatred leaps out like sparks from flint and iron. Society thinks that mistakes are made and crimes committed through the human soul being too much itself, going its own way. But crimes really happen through the soul being too little itself, striving to conform, or being crushed into conformity.

The story of "The House in Dormer Forest" is the story of the Darke family: a selfish father, a selfish mother, a selfish grandmother, none of whom sees the slightest reason for comprehending or for considering either each other or the other members of the household; a cousin who lives with the family, a beautiful and thoroughly unscrupulous girl who may be trusted never to disobey a convention and never to let any consideration of ethics or simple humanity stand in the way of getting what she wants; the servants and neighbors, sharply individualized men and women; and the four Darke children, Jasper, young, ardent, an idealist spiritually, merely antagonized and intellectually untrained; Ruby, superficial, childish, tied at 18, in an appalling ignorance and materialism, to a "suitable match" that is nothing short of horrible; Peter, selfish, unthinking, undeveloped, harried into wrong-doing by suspicion and hostility, and Amber, who, plain, shy, 30 years old, is the story's heroine, an unselfish woman with a sense of hu-

Latest Works of Fiction

SHE AND ALLAN.* By H. Rider Haggard. With frontispiece. Longmans, Green & Co. $2.25.

WHILE Sir Rider Haggard's latest romance will give keen pleasure to all who delight in a well-told and thrilling story of adventure, there are two sets of people who will find in it the one especial enjoyment, the other an especial profit. The first is composed of those who are thoroughly familiar with its author's work, persons to whom the mysterious veiled Ayesha, called Hiya and "She-Who-Commands," mighty Umslopogaas, wielder of the axe named Inkosikaas (Chieftainess), Hans the Hottentot, and Zikali, Opener of Roads, the "Thing-that-should-never-have-been-born," are acquaintances of long standing, and Allan himself a dear and valued friend, while the second is made up of the individuals to whom this new novel will serve as an introduction to the Wizard of Africa, since it will in all likelihood send them hastening to bookshops and libraries or wherever there is a chance of procuring the other volumes in which these same characters appear.

For more even than his inventive faculty, his vividness of description and remarkable narrative gift, it is his ability to portray character which places Rider Haggard so very far above his imitators and would-be rivals. The adventures he relates are often, to put it mildly, very far from probable, but those to whom they happen are real people, and it is in great measure because of this that the adventures themselves take on, for the time when we are reading them at least, an air of credibility. The trilogy dealing with the fall of the royal Zulu House of Senzangacona is, of course, in the main historical; not so, however, this tale of "She and Allan," in which we read of Allan's journey to the ancient City of Kôr, and of the many strange things which befell him therein, some of which seemed to transcend the bounds of possible human experience. Yet among them were several which contained lessons that many of us would do well to consider very thoughtfully indeed—lessons whose power and beauty may easily be overlooked because they appear in a tale of romantic adventure, and not in what some are pleased to call a "serious" novel. Many causes combined to send Allan to the country of those particularly unpleasant savages, the Amahagger; but the primary one was his desire to open "a road beyond the River of Death," that he might learn whether those he loved and who had loved him did indeed live on, though men declared them dead. Zikali, the old and terrible Zulu witch-doctor who was called "Opener of Roads," read this wish in Allan's mind, and when it marched with certain desires of his own, told him of the great White Queen, reputed to be immortal, who lived and reigned in a land far beyond the Sinabest River, and was the greatest seer of them all. But Allan would probably have given up the enterprise had not a series of circumstances, due, so the little yellow Hans maintained, to Zikali's magic, while Allan insisted that they rose from purely natural causes, sent him first to the domain of the People of the Axe, where the mighty Umslopogaas was chief, and then to the isolated settlement of Strathmuir, near the banks of the Zambesi, where that happened which left him no choice but to endeavor, at least, to make the perilous journey into the territory of the cannibal Amahagger.

And there he encountered many strange and very wonderful things; but through all the extraordinary events that followed he remained entirely skeptical. Was it not manifestly impossible for any human being to live 200 years, let alone 2,000—though, as Ayesha angrily reminded him, "the buried seed or the sealed-up toad can live as long." Then there was her sudden inexplicable appearance in the midst of the battle, the vision of the City of Kôr, and the yet more extraordinary vision which came to Allan what time she led him down into the Halls of Hades, where he learned that in the end "man must answer to himself," his own ultimate judge, and learned, too, a bitter lesson of humility—none the less bitter because he persisted in maintaining that She had but hypnotised him for her own malicious amusement. But of all these events the reader must learn for himself.

The novel is as fresh, as vivid, as full of dramatic and exciting incidents as though its author were a youthful enthusiast, while its construction and deft manipulation of events show the skill of the practiced narrator. There are thrilling moments in the fight with the herd of hippopotami, and the romantic wars which greeted the homeward-bound hunters, while the account of the journey through the enormous swamp and the ambush with which it ended have the convincingness and rich color that abound in Sir Rider Haggard's other novels. Yet these are by no means the high moments of the story; those occur when Ayesha renders judgment upon the men who would have betrayed her, when "all the heaven was turned into one blaze of light, and by it I saw Ayesha standing, tall and rigid, with her hand pointed inward the line of men in front of her," in Umslopogaas's duel with the giant Resu, in Allan's midnight vision, first of the dead City of Kôr, majestic in its awful loneliness, then of the same city as it had been in the days of its greatness, the climax coming when, by Ayesha's art Allan was swept, still living, down into the Halls of Hades. To these must be added those parts of Ayesha's history as given by herself, with its fine symbolism of the two great goddesses, Aphrodite and Isis, when "in the eternal war between the spirit and the flesh" Ayesha chose the part of flesh, worshipping Aphrodite of the Greeks, and that in the very sanctuary of the holy Isis, whose priestess she was. Therefore was a curse laid upon her, the curse which held her, wise and powerful, yet a prisoner, there in the country of the Amahagger—and in not one word of which was skeptical Allan willing to believe, thus greatly irritating the imperious lady. Full of action and of color, picturesque and dramatic, this tale which recounts the meeting of "She and Allan" is a worthy successor to a long line of fascinating romances.

SIX SECONDS OF DARKNESS

SIX SECONDS OF DARKNESS.* By Octavus Roy Cohen. Dodd, Mead & Co.

IN the average detective story, the problem put up to the more or less astute gentleman whose business it is to unravel the tangle is, almost invariably, "Who did it?"—it, of course, being either the robbery or the murder, as the case may be. But in Mr. Octavus Roy Cohen's new, ingenious and very entertaining story, the riddle which David Carroll—who to many of us is an old and esteemed acquaintance—is called upon to solve, is, rather, "Who did not do it?" his problem being to absolve the innocent first, before even attempting to convict the guilty. This somewhat novel twist gives added interest to a tale which is plausible, and well worked out to a satisfying climax.

It all began one pleasant Summer evening, when there was absolutely "nothing doing" at Police Headquarters. Farrell, the old-timer at the telephone, and Desk Sergeant Larry O'Brien were having a calm and agreeable little chat about the threatened scandal in the Police Department, when the news came which startled even them, veteran policemen though they were—the news that Edward J. Hamilton, reformer, wealthy bachelor and society man, had been shot dead in his own home. It was a perfectly clear case of murder. Mrs. Faber, Hamilton's housekeeper, had telephoned to Police Commissioner Hall, who had been Hamilton's friend, and who lost not a particle of time in getting on the job. But it seemed at first as if small investigation would be necessary. For only a very little while after the news came, Eunice Duval, the dead man's ward, arrived at headquarters, and announced with a good deal of agitation that it was she who had killed Hamilton. This confession might have been expected to end the matter, but it didn't. For, to the intense surprise of those present, not long afterward there came a man, elderly and bewildered, who announced that he wanted to give himself up, as he had just killed Edward J. Hamilton. And as if all this did not make things puzzling enough, a third person presently appeared, declaring emphatically, "I killed Edward Hamilton." And one of the most curious parts of it all was that the different stories told by the three all agreed on one point—that for a very brief time, just a few seconds, the electric light had gone out. There had been "Six Seconds of Darkness," during which the murder had been committed. And, of course, it was perfectly obvious that the single shot which killed Hamilton could not possibly have been fired by three separate individuals!

Even then the complications were not ended; the more they probed into the mystery, the more puzzling it became. Police Commissioner Hall had at once called into the case the boyish-looking but very clever detective, David Carroll, but even he confessed that he was "up in the air" as to the solution of the mystery. Of course he did finally discover the truth and the guilty person—an individual whose identity will come as a surprise to all but the most discerning and experienced readers. The book is marred by careless proofreading, but it is an interesting and often exciting yarn, quite worthy of the author of "Gray Dusk" and "The Crimson Alibi."

THE UNDERWOOD MYSTERY

THE UNDERWOOD MYSTERY.* By Charles J. Dutton. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co.

WHILE there are many elements in the make-up of a first-class detective story, there is none more important than that of keeping the reader keyed up to the highest pitch of curiosity as to who really did commit the crime, which is nearly always the basis of the plot. In fact, this is essential, for in most books of this type the action would seem monotonous and colorless were it not for the bearing that all of it must have on the ultimate solution of the problem. In the present work there is no lack of incident, and most of it is of the good, old-fashioned melodramatic kind, with two murders, knockdowns in the dark, a lost will, electric hand-lamps flashing about mysterious chambers, revolver hidden under a bed, safes that are opened by persons who do not know the combination but are gifted with an extraordinary delicacy of touch and so on. All this we have had before, but, unlike many detective yarns of much less merit, this one employs the familiar "props" so skillfully that they actually belong to the narrative instead of being forced in, as is so often the case. One realizes that the story could not have been told without them, and though they tend steadily to the mystifying of the reader, they are not offensively obvious in their purpose. In fact, the whole book has an atmosphere of restraint and good-natured appeal which makes it pleasant reading in spite of its underlying tragedy.

John Underwood, a power in Wall Street and a multimillionaire, is found dead in the library of his country mansion one morning, shot through the temple. The doors and windows are all fastened on the inside, and at first it is supposed to be suicide. The super-detective, or "crime investigator," John Bartley, who is the leading character in the story, soon disproves this. He shows that Underwood must have been killed by somebody else, who, in some inexplicable manner, contrived to get out of the library, locking the doors behind him, or else escaped by the fastened windows. The dead man has a son, Robert, who is somewhat "wild," but who, as the reader soon perceives, is not a bad fellow in the main. Then there is Mrs. Underwood, much younger than her slain husband, who was a show girl in a New York theatre before her marriage. Both of these personages are suspected, and Robert even is locked up in jail for a night. There are several other characters who would be unhesitatingly picked out as the murderer were it not that all detective-story-wise persons know that the author never throws the light on the real assassin until the very last page or so. Bartley is one of the cool, pipe-smoking, inscrutable descendants of Sherlock Holmes, who are never at a loss no matter how puzzling the conditions, and when he is quite ready he puts his finger on the man who killed John Underwood with the calmness of absolute certainty characteristic of his type. Of course the murderer is some one who could not be suspected beforehand, although it seems logical enough when all is explained.

It is not only the outcome that holds the reader—and this is markedly one of the qualities in which "The Underwood Mystery" excels the average cut-and-dried detective yarn—for the narration is interesting throughout. Moreover, there are some good bits of description, especially that of a foggy night on the New England coast, where the scene is laid.

THE MONSTER

THE MONSTER.* By Horace Bleackley. New York: George H. Doran Company. $2.

HERE is a new variant of the historical novel. The fictional literature of all tongues is rich in stories dealing with the political developments, the manners and customs, the pomp and pageantry of life in dead and gone times. But Mr. Bleackley gives us something new, the historical novel of industrial life. The villain of his story, the "monster" of his title, is the factory system of England during nearly a century of its development, until the eighties of the last century. Its action begins during the latter years of the eighteenth century with the cruelties that were practiced upon the helpless apprentices, the little boys and girls of seven, ten and twelve years who furnished the cheap labor which the factory owners and managers declared was necessary for the successful operation of their system. It is a gruesome story that compels their attention. A Senator or Congressman serves on at least one active committee, which frequently requires much of his time and thought. He has legislation in his care, some of which he must promote, some which he must oppose. He must attend the sessions of the Senate or House. He must keep in touch with his State or district—the home people see to that—and his mail is large and his visitors few. The call of the lobby (good and bad) is insistent, and he must prepare (one hopes he prepares) speeches, let us say, now and then. When all this is ended—and some of it is never ended—and after applicants for office are heard and answered, then, and not till then, does our legislator have time to study the actual workings of the Government itself. In debate there is, of course, much said that would give a legislator a sort of knowledge of affairs by a kind of attrition, except that this is subject to discount as being the product of minds frequently as voluble as ill informed. The reviewer recalls one fairly long address on a portion of his own work in which not a single correct statement was made, though the orator was a party friend, and also a deliberate statement by a Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations which, while kindly meant, had as a matter of fact no relation to the subject under discussion. The halls of Congress are not places in which to look for widespread accurate knowledge of the working details of Government administration.

The controlling reason, however, for general ignorance of our governmental operations lies in the fact that they have grown so large in volume and varied in scope that no one man's mind can readily grasp them all. To illustrate this, and at the same time emphasize Mr. Ireland's plea for a study of the technique of public administration, let us assume that a chief administrator was sought for any one of our largest railway systems or for the great company which directs our national telephone operations. In the one case men would look for a railroad man, in the other for one experienced in telephone affairs. A truism this, a matter of course. But the Post Office Department is a larger business enterprise than any one of our largest railway systems. It is more extensive and more intensive, covering the whole earth and reaching every individual. So the Navy Department is more extensive than the greatest telephone company and involves problems industrial, technical, human, pedagogical and even astronomical, quite as numerous and complex as those which beset a telephone manager. And these are but two out of many. Yet no voice is raised for any action or selection that in the least is based upon intelligent comprehension of the facts that affect administration. We do not provide conditions for success but are quick to denounce failure.

A result of these circumstances is a widespread belief that administrative conditions are worse than they are. What men do not understand they are likely to suspect and there can always be found enough that merits disapproval to throw a shadow over all when little is clearly known. It may cause a smile to say that some Government services are as efficient as the best private practice or that some Government expenditure returns to the country a profit that would make private profiteers envious, but both are true. More than once has it been the reviewer's privilege to bring before members of both Houses of Congress essential operations of important public services of which they had never heard, and this through no fault of their own.

Mr. Ireland is right in his criticism of the pitifully small salaries paid directing and supervising officers of Government services, but his apparent conclusion that efficient public servants cannot therefore be had is not fully justified by facts. There are men, many of them, of the best grade, some of these acknowledged national leaders in their specialties, who have served the public long and well in the great national executive departments and still do so. Without, however, the evil of incompetent leadership being as serious as Mr. Ireland seems to infer, it is true that the difficulty of retaining expert services increases steadily. One curious commentary on some criticisms of Government servants is the fact that our best industries constantly strive to take them away into their own employment. One of the reviewer's subordinates was asked he name his own salary by a great company which sought to employ him. He refused to do so, largely because he could do more creative work where he was.

Probably few will adopt Mr. Ireland's hope for the restoration of what he calls representative conditions with its concomitant of an aristocratic government, a government by the best." Neither will all share his view that progress lies toward limiting the franchise to those who by inherited qualities, by education and property ownership are, he thinks, specially fitted to exercise it. The dangers from the delegated will of ignorant masses, swept by waves of passion or misled by demagogues, are too real to be either denied or ignored, but one cannot be sure that he suggests that solution which is the only one necessary or practicable. Let it be admitted that the cry of "more voters" is dead in the land and we shall soon begin to hear the cry of "better voters." May it so be! Mixed we met these "press with vigor" all the forces of betterment of every kind rather than attempt to exclude the unfit who now hold the ballot?

Our author treads upon more solid ground when he discusses the educational system. In a vivid way he shows the weakness of our present schools and the parsimony that threatens their life. May we hope that our women voters will use their power not to remove what is now once a social injustice and a political menace and will insist that teaching shall no longer be the "underpaid tenth" of employments?

Two interesting chapters are given by our author to a study of the relative effects of heredity and environment on character and mentality. This discussion does not seem adequately or directly linked up with the general thesis of the book, although his contention that government demands the best possible is the finest character of the entire plea.

Democracy and the Human Equation

A Review by
WILLIAM C. REDFIELD

DEMOCRACY AND THE HUMAN EQUATION.* By Alyne Ireland. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $3.

UPON the reviewer's desk lay two books, one a novel of adventure promising hours of surcease from care, the other the book under review. The latter was opened, a glance was taken at the introduction, a few paragraphs were read, and the novel lay unused, for the author's study of the human problems involved in government was absorbing. Nor was the little volume put aside until the very end was reached.

Some one said—it was posted in the Wayside Pulpit—"Whatever kind of a world men build now, we all have to live in it. Let us all take a hand in the building." It is to such service that Mr. Ireland's book calls. His reveillé is clear if not always commanding. He feels that we have departed governmentally from the ways our fathers trod and that the departure has been on the whole for ill rather than for good. We have, in his view, passed over from representative government to one guided too much if not wholly by unthinking delegates who obey their master's will instead of giving to our national service the fruits of the intelligent judgment of selected men. Successful and threatening mediocrity reigns in national councils and we get rather the results of mob psychology through its mouthpieces than the deliberate counsels of informed and independent thinkers. To our author's thought this has already wrought serious harm and threatens disaster. He feels this so keenly as to warn that if we do not restore the truly representative quality to our government we shall soon have to struggle for its preservation.

We find in this book a sharp contrast drawn between a republic, with representative government, and a democracy, with delegates obeying the popular will. In the former, the representatives are said to control the State throrgh decisions reached after intelligent debate by well-informed men acting with independent judgment and with all the facts before them, subject, of course, to review by the electors. In the latter, obedience regins—to party, to pledges, to personal or political necessities—and the normal attitude is keeping the "ear to the ground."

Mr. Ireland also clearly shows the need of technical skill in administration and alleges the woeful want of it. It is true, as he says, that we are prone to think that success in one line evidences ability in another, as, for example that a successful legislator is, ipso facto, capable of being a successful administrator. There is not yet a science of administration, there are only the beginnings of appreciation that there is a need for such a science. We may indeed go further—much further. Very little is generally known about the facts or problems of government administration and there exists no sufficient means of learning what in reality it is and involves. Few of our editors, publicists or correspondents have accurate knowledge on any considerable scale of what government administration actually is, how it works and what it does. Yet we are vocal upon the subject all over the land, but without substantial basis in ascertained facts. After some years of legislative and executive experience, the reviewer set down the following working rules of public criticism as it is commonly done:

Rule 1. Make the criticism.

Rule 2. Get the facts.

Rule 3. If they fail to sustain you, don't apologize.

Much reflection convinces that this procedure is the usual even if an abnormal one.

Nor is the general ignorance of what administration is, does and involves confined to professional critics. It is quite as deep and widespread among legislators. Probably few men in either house of Congress could on sudden request state correctly what services were contained in any two or three of the great Government departments. Still less could they say in detail what those services do. There are, of course, members whose committee work has brought them into intimate contact with some services and who, therefore, know those well. Again certain Senators and Representatives have held executive posts or take a special personal interest in some service and understand it. Members of appropriation committees also get a rapidly moving picture, through subcommittee work, of some parts of the great administrative mechanism. But when these qualifications are made, it remains true that Congress itself is on the whole quite as ignorant as the rest of the country about the actual workings of administration. There is also this further truth, that Congress thinks it knows, and talks with a freedom that constantly betrays the valor of ignorance. As a result suspicion often takes the part of wisdom and accusation that of accuracy.

Nor is this written in unkindly criticism of our legislators. The facts that exist are rather their misfortune than their fault. They are busy men, with much about them every day that compels their attention. It is quite as deep and widespread among legislators. Probably few men in either house of Congress could on sudden request state correctly what services were contained in any two or three of the great Government departments. Still less could they say in detail what those services do. There are, of course, members whose committee work has brought them into intimate contact with some services and who, therefore, know those well. Again certain Senators and Representatives have held executive posts or take a special personal interest in some service and understand it. Members of appropriation committees also get a rapidly moving picture, through subcommittee work, of some parts of the great administrative mechanism. But when these qualifications are made, it remains true that Congress itself is on the whole quite as ignorant as the rest of the country about the actual workings of administration. There is also this further truth, that Congress thinks it knows, and talks with a freedom that constantly betrays the valor of ignorance. As a result suspicion often takes the part of wisdom and accusation that of accuracy.

Nor is this written in unkindly criticism of our legislators. The facts that exist are rather their misfortune than their fault. They are busy men, with much about them every day that compels their attention. A Senator or Congressman serves on at least one active committee, which frequently requires much of his time and thought. He has legislation in his care, some of which he must promote, some which he must oppose. He must attend the sessions of the Senate or House. He must keep in touch with his State or district—the home people see to that—and his mail is large and his visitors few. The call of the lobby (good and bad) is insistent, and he must prepare (one hopes he prepares) speeches, let us say, now and then. When all this is ended—and some of it is never ended—and after applicants for office are heard and answered, then, and not till then, does our legislator have time to study the actual workings of the Government itself. In debate there is, of course, much said that would give a legislator a sort of knowledge of affairs by a kind of attrition, except that this is subject to discount as being the product of minds frequently as voluble as ill informed. The reviewer recalls one fairly long address on a portion of his own work in which not a single correct statement was made, though the orator was a party friend, and also a deliberate statement by a Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations which, while kindly meant, had as a matter of fact no relation to the subject under discussion. The halls of Congress are not places in which to look for widespread accurate knowledge of the working details of Government administration.

The controlling reason, however, for general ignorance of our governmental operations lies in the fact that they have grown so large in volume and varied in scope that no one man's mind can readily grasp them all. To illustrate this, and at the same time emphasize Mr. Ireland's plea for a study of the technique of public administration, let us assume that a chief administrator was sought for any one of our largest railway systems or for the great company which directs our national telephone operations. In the one case men would look for a railroad man, in the other for one experienced in telephone affairs. A truism this, a matter of course. But the Post Office Department is a larger business enterprise than any one of our largest railway systems. It is more extensive and more intensive, covering the whole earth and reaching every individual. So the Navy Department is more extensive than the greatest telephone company and involves problems industrial, technical, human, pedagogical and even astronomical, quite as numerous and complex as those which beset a telephone manager. And these are but two out of many. Yet no voice is raised for any action or selection that in the least is based upon intelligent comprehension of the facts that affect administration. We do not provide conditions for success but are quick to denounce failure.

A result of these circumstances is a widespread belief that administrative conditions are worse than they are. What men do not understand they are likely to suspect and there can always be found enough that merits disapproval to throw a shadow over all when little is clearly known. It may cause a smile to say that some Government services are as efficient as the best private practice or that some Government expenditure returns to the country a profit that would make private profiteers envious, but both are true. More than once has it been the reviewer's privilege to bring before members of both Houses of Congress essential operations of important public services of which they had never heard, and this through no fault of their own.

Mr. Ireland is right in his criticism of the pitifully small salaries paid directing and supervising officers of Government services, but his apparent conclusion that efficient public servants cannot therefore be had is not fully justified by facts. There are men, many of them, of the best grade, some of these acknowledged national leaders in their specialties, who have served the public long and well in the great national executive departments and still do so. Without, however, the evil of incompetent leadership being as serious as Mr. Ireland seems to infer, it is true that the difficulty of retaining expert services increases steadily. One curious commentary on some criticisms of Government servants is the fact that our best industries constantly strive to take them away into their own employment. One of the reviewer's subordinates was asked he name his own salary by a great company which sought to employ him. He refused to do so, largely because he could do more creative work where he was.

Probably few will adopt Mr. Ireland's hope for the restoration of what he calls representative conditions with its concomitant of an aristocratic government, a government by the best." Neither will all share his view that progress lies toward limiting the franchise to those who by inherited qualities, by education and property ownership are, he thinks, specially fitted to exercise it. The dangers from the delegated will of ignorant masses, swept by waves of passion or misled by demagogues, are too real to be either denied or ignored, but one cannot be sure that he suggests that solution which is the only one necessary or practicable. Let it be admitted that the cry of "more voters" is dead in the land and we shall soon begin to hear the cry of "better voters." May it so be! Mixed we met these "press with vigor" all the forces of betterment of every kind rather than attempt to exclude the unfit who now hold the ballot?

Our author treads upon more solid ground when he discusses the educational system. In a vivid way he shows the weakness of our present schools and the parsimony that threatens their life. May we hope that our women voters will use their power not to remove what is now once a social injustice and a political menace and will insist that teaching shall no longer be the "underpaid tenth" of employments?

Two interesting chapters are given by our author to a study of the relative effects of heredity and environment on character and mentality. This discussion does not seem adequately or directly linked up with the general thesis of the book, although his contention that government demands the best possible is the finest character of the entire plea.

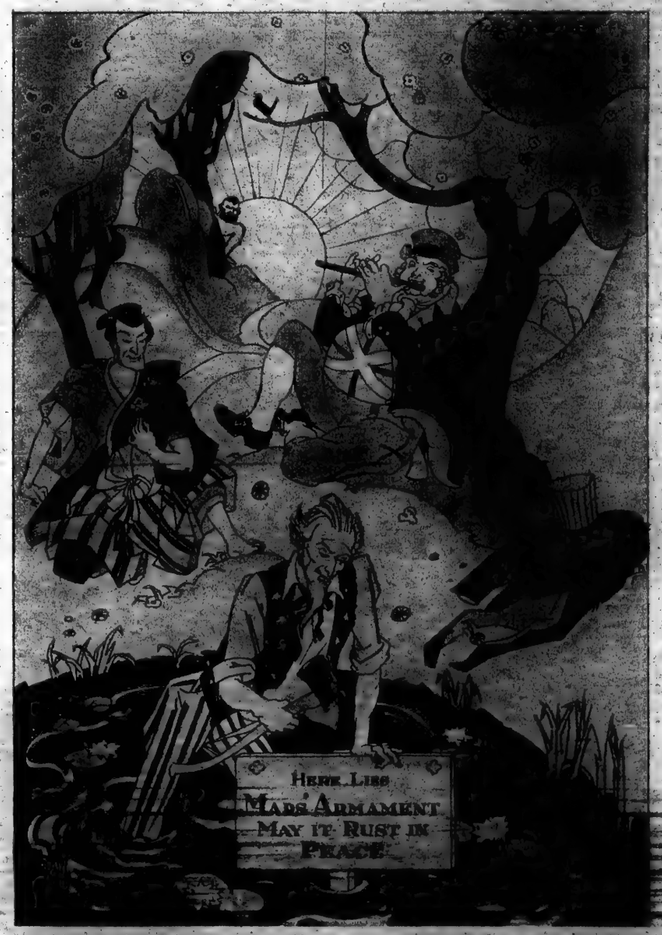
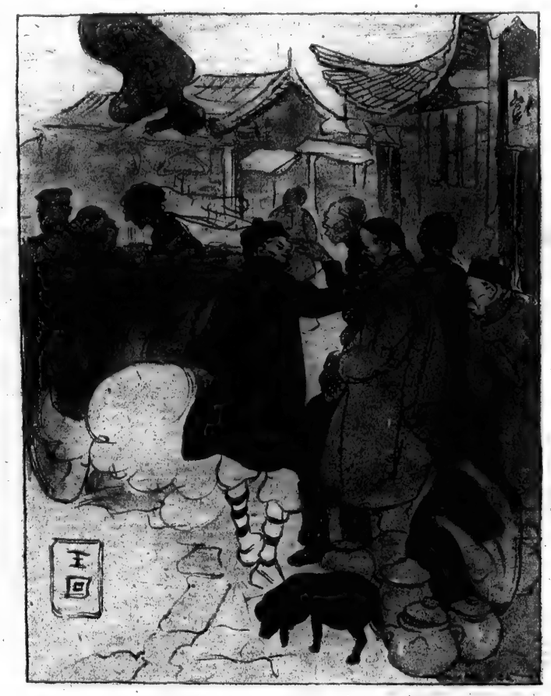
OPTIMIST'S VISION OF THE FUTURE



Woman and Water-Devil



"And small me followed, respectfully staying behind as befitteth a servant and telling the many people who asked me that this was my master, the great soldier-tiger, and praying them not to mind the indiscreet questions made by the women, saying that they were crazy."

This is one of a series of stories of ... life contributed from time to ... by Major Rudinger to this ...

* * * * *

"And the next afternoon, while small me was walking in the garden of my master's house, anxious to obtain beautiful flowers to decorate his table and cogitating which colors would match best, there came two women in a carriage and they wanted to see the soldier-tiger. One of the women was tall and thin and the other was stout and fat and both were of advanced age. But they were dressed like young girls, as is the fashion of the women of Mei-Guo, of America.

"And small me approached the carriage with great dignity as befitteth a member of my master's household and bowed and made respectful greetings and asked for the card on which is printed the name.

"And the women began to seek in bags which they carried and which must have contained ten times ten thousand things, judging from the time they needed to find aforementioned cards. And one of the women took a pair of eyeglasses which were fastened to a long handle and looking through them at small me said to the other woman that I was very neatly dressed, which was a great insult to my master, for, did she perhaps expect the number one boi of my master to look like a too-feh, a brigand?

"And small me led them into the large room just above the garden, where my master receives his guests and where I bade them to be seated, offering them small tobacco-rolls, which my master keeps there, of a special kind. But the women looked at me with much arched eyebrows, saying that it was a sin to smoke and that people who smoke and who drank wine would surely go to the tah-kang.

"Ai ai yah—and my heart turned black, for these women spake as do the missionary people who come here to China and who belong to many churches, saying that only their church is right and that the one of the other missionaries is wrong, and who say that we Chinese are heathens and that it is a sin to smoke and to drink wine and to go to the theatre, but that people should sing from a small black book and always go to the foreign joss-house.

"And my master said 'damn damn' in a strong voice when I told him that the woman had come and that they spake of sin and tah-kang, and he made a face as if he had drunk much ounce of the Soy bean, which is salty and bitter, and he spake to me thus: 'Chang, thou wilt go and get the chop-tse, the motor-car ready, for I will take these women to the Chinese city and thou wilt come with me, walking behind us and when the foreign women insult the people there by making remarks lacking discretion, then thou wilt apologize in my name, saying that they are only strangers who do not know better.'

* * * * * *

"Some time ago my master's cook, who had been with him for many years and who was a friend of mine, made the acquaintance of a sailorman from Mei-Guo, America, who gave him a drink from a bottle which contained wine which had been made in America and which he called moone-shee-ne and very soon my master had to look out for another cook.

"And the foreign woman who had heard of it induced my master with much oration to take her cook, saying that she intended to travel to Tientsin and that she did not need him any more. But she did it to save one month's wages, for instead of paying him one month notice, she told him that with much effort and trouble she had induced the soldier-tiger to employ him.

"And this cook was a great thief and rascal who made plenty cumshaw on everything he bought for my master, and when I discovered it and claimed half, being the number one boi, he say 'nay' and called me many and ugly names, and ever since he has insulted me very much and tried to induce my master to send me back to the company and hire a second cousin of his, a still greater thief, instead of, me. And my heart grew black against him and small me thought how to drive the cook away from the house.

* * * * * * *

"And we drove to the City of Shanghai, which is beyond the French Concession, and the women acted very foolishly. Small me had come along, too, because my master had said: 'Come thou with me, for it is hard to be with two women and to listen to all their prattling. And how can I beat the drum and row the boat beside—meaning that this would be too much for him.'

"And small me followed, respectfully staying behind as befitteth a servant and telling the many people who asked me that this was my master, the great soldier-tiger, and praying them not to mind the indiscreet questions made by the women, saying that they were crazy. Verily, verily, very tactless were those women. There was an old painter, a very famous artist who paints for rich and noble people. And we went into his place and there came the old painter who had just left his food and he had been eating rice and cabbage. And he made obeisance and hospitable and friendly greetings, offering my master and the two women to share his food. And my master tasted it and pronounced it excellent, but the women said that it did not look nice and that they did not like the smell of the cabbage.

"And so we walked about, and the women acted as if they were small children and they tittered like birds.

"And my master looked very unhappy.

"After we had walked through many streets and alleys we came to the tea-house of the willow-pattern, in the centre of the city, which is situated on a small island in a beautiful pond and a very artistic bridge leading to it. And nearby was a large tent on which were many inscriptions, saying that very rare and wild animals would be shown inside. And upon request of the women my master paid to the owner of the tent twenty-five tungbe and we entered. And there were many monkeys and birds with manicolored feathers and many snakes. And in a corner there stood a box shaped like a coffin. And the women asked what there was inside of the box. And the owner spake thus: 'Verily, a very rare animal is in this box, but I must keep it hidden because many people are afraid to look at it.' And after having received ten more tungbe he opened the box.

"Verily, O Light of Virtue, a great fright and terror came over small me, for in the box, was a water-devil. Yea, verily, a water-devil, very fearful to behold, shaped like a dragon, with a long snout and big teeth and eyes like coals.

"And small me fell down and made obeisance in great fear and prayed to the spirits to protect me, and the women laughed and my master spake thus: 'Thou be but a fool to believe this is a devil. This be only a rare animal, called Ke-lo-ko-di-le and it comes from Yindoo, from India, where it lives in rivers, and it is not dangerous.'

"And small me was very much ashamed. And the women requested my master to ask the owner for the price of the animal, not because they

"A big water-devil had descended from a fiery cloud on which he had been riding and * * * he had come into the house, flames sporting from his mouth. Also * * * he rolled his eyes and smoke came from his nostrils and his tail was ten thousand lee—miles—long and he threatened to swallow the house and everybody therein."

deaks, papers, all are so." An extension of the belief of St. Francis. No doubt the hearty laughter of Luks would tear in shreds this vaporous doctrine of the East, but who would not have his gorgeous bunch of Autumn bloom as a member of the family, who would not be delighted to think of this deep and radiant beauty as having a continuing life in art as throbbing and dynamic as our own? It is the whole of an artist's magic thus to bestow life and continuance upon the inanimate and mortal. This vase of flowers was created in a happy moment when health and force of color, energy and resilience of line combined to make it a type of normal beauty, the reconciliation of the real and the ideal.

At the Powell Galleries are four exhibitions. The first is given to a group of "Fantaisies in Painting and Embroidery" by Amanda Forbes, playful experiments in combining lace and silk with pigment in crisp pictures suitable for little screens or fans. They are ever so little overweighted by the material, but have, nevertheless, an aspect of agreeable gayety and lightness suitable to the idea. Another wall is occupied by a group of landscapes and sea pieces by Carolyn Mase, delicately reminiscent of the teaching of Twachtman, and with something of his purity of color and transparency of tone; and a group of pictures by Marion Eldridge commemorating the region about Provincetown, with an especially vivacious canvas dedicated to the fun known as "The Whistling Oyster."

The opposite wall is held by Henry Davenport, who shows a variety of subjects painted with much flexibility of style, "The Italian Box," the most interesting, a nude figure among the blond light draperies that have taken the place in modern art of the Indian shawls and Persian rugs of a previous generation.

In the last room J. Mortimer Lichtenauer is showing his work, portraits, flowers and studies for murals. The mural compositions show the strongest side of this gifted artist's work. They are planned with knowledge, and the figures have a quality of nervous energy unusual to find in decorative work today.

Red Cross in France and Britain

complishment. The Paris organization was first installed in 4 Place de la Concorde, on the corner of the rue Royale. In a short time it had overflowed into countless annexes and supplementary offices, until the entire organization, with the exception of one unit, moved on June 16, 1918, into the Hotel Regina, opposite the Louvre.

The growth in England was no less rapid, beginning with the creation of Army Base, Section 3, and the Commission for Great Britain with Lieut. Col. Endicott at its head. Colonel Endicott's first work was the establishment of a Liverpool hospital for American troops. The conversion of Mosley Hill estate was begun on Nov. 19, 1917, and the work proceeded so swiftly that six weeks later the hospital was open for patients. When this hospital was finally taken over by the Army it boasted 500 beds. It was the task of our Red Cross in Great Britain to meet the demands of more than a million American soldiers who passed through the British Isles on their way to the front. The organization met these demands with consistent efficiency, acting in emergencies, like the Otranto disaster, with the same promptitude that characterized its routine work. The opening chapter in Mr. Fife's book describes in detail the tragedy of the Otranto, and a more effective beginning could not have been made. Mr. Fife writes in explanation:

> Instead of following the unyielding method of historical progression it seemed far better to sharpen the perspective abruptly and show at once what, through preparation and resource, the Red Cross was able to accomplish in an emergency so swift, so tragic.

Mr. Fife then informs us, in the following paragraph, that many of the details which he gives of the disaster now appear in print for the first time.

Mr. Hungerford pays an enthusiastic tribute to Major Perkins, who succeeded Major Murphy as American Red Cross Commissioner to France, and whose efforts were so largely responsible for the success of the organization that he led. Mr. Hungerford writes: "To most of his fellow-workers he was known as Major Perkins; yet, to many of them, 'Jim Perkins' was the designation given to this much-loved American Red Cross officer. For, if Major Murphy left behind him a splendid reputation for expertness and efficiency, Major James H. Perkins left his monument in Paris in the great affection which he gained in the heart and mind of each of his associates. He won the love and respect of every man and woman in the organization. For here was a real man; a man who, if you please, preferred to gain loyalty—the quality so extremely necessary to any successful organization, whether of war time or of peace—through his own personality, his kindliness and his fairness rather than by the authority vested in his office."

In a quotation from a report made by Major Perkins one finds some hint of the struggles that were necessary to make the Red Cross what it finally became.

> It is impossible for any one who has not had the experience of the last year in France to realize the difficulties which stood in the way of organizing an enormous quasi business, quasi relief organization; personnel was hard to get from America, supplies were hard to get, transportation was almost impossible, the mail service was bad and the telephone service was worse; but in spite of all these troubles the spirit with which the men of the organization undertook everything, carried things through in the most wonderful manner.

These two books tell the story of how difficulties were overcome and triumphs achieved. General Pershing said that until his army could become a combatant force it remained for the Red Cross to carry the American flag in Europe. The Red Cross justified the General's faith. It not only bound up the wounds of its own men, but it strengthened the morale of the allied forces. There has been much discussion as to who won the war. The question can never be decided to the satisfaction of all competitors, but the American Red Cross, at least, can remain serenely content in the consciousness of its individual victory.

The Vikings

"Social Scandinavia in the Viking Age" is a scholarly and readable study of the ways of life of the Northmen during the period in which their influence was contributing to European history. After describing the geographic environment, appearance and character of these kindred of the peoples of British blood, the book traces the career of the individual from the time he was named to the elaborate, final rites performed at his death. The study includes such matters as food, dress and dwellings; the customs of courtship, the nature of marriage and family life; methods of transportation and travel; the peaceful industries and recreations and the methods of waging warfare; the manner in which the Northmen governed themselves and administered justice; the form of their artistic and literary expression, and the religious observances and superstitions which colored their lives. The volume is illustrated with numerous drawings and photographs. Mary Wilhelmine Williams, Ph. D., the author of the book, is associate professor of History in Goucher College. (The Macmillan Company. $6.)

"Betty, There Must Be Some Way Out"

There was a way. A shot rang out—the husband who was in the way huddled lifeless in his chair—Suicide, they said—but—

Betty was freed—Billy, whom she thought dead, was back from the war to claim her—Hull, the fisherman, had a score to pay—and all three confessed.

And not until the bullet was found marking a significant passage in a volume of Marcus Aurelius did the unsuspected slayer break down.

THE WORLD OF ART: Portraits and Sketches

Painting by Sargent Recently Acquired by the Brooklyn Museum.
Portrait of Paul Helleu.

THE preliminary sketches for the war portraits have been placed on exhibition at the Arden Galleries and they serve to say. They prove, that is, that artists want to their task with ... interest, bidden at their subjects ... sympathy, felt the influences of ... surroundings and recorded ... impressions directly and with ... decision. Not all this can be dis... covered in the completed canvases at ... Metropolitan Museum. Of ... course, many fine qualities reward a ... studious search. The painting ... Mr. Sargeant's portrait of Prince ... Arthur is both light and rich in tex... ture, and the inscrutable expression ... of the aged Prince is sensitively in... dicated, but the slight emphasis on ... the Japanese character of the design ... and the finished canvas lessens its ... distinction. The preliminary study, ... a fresh product of a Western ... mind at work upon Eastern ma... terial, is an animated composition. ... And here among the sketches is a ... masterly study by Miss Beatrice ... Clemenceau speaking. All the ... agility is in it that dodged away ... in the heavier version. And Mr. ... Orpen's "Marshal Foch" on his ... phlegmatic horse, so fully null in the ... finished picture, how well it seems in the ... pencil sketch, the rider at one with ... his steed and the steed quivering ... with the pains of life, a pains be... ing dangerously slow in the palate. ... A few of the portraits have ... caught the spontaneity of the first ... sketch—the "Lloyd George" by ... Sir John Lavery, poised above his pale ... hands and pendant his grey mane; ... the "Cardinal Mercier," by Miss ... Beatrice, to which reference already ... has been made; the straightforward, ... almost stolid "Admiral Sims" by Irv... ing R. Wiles—but in most of them ... something has crept out or crept in ... that vitiates the general effect. ... A great feature of the sketch ... exhibition is the series of studies by ... Gari Melchers, for which the ... signing of the Peace Treaty gave ... him various engagements. ... These are beautiful studies. The ... room in which the signers are all... work, out of doors and indif... ferent to the artist and his efforts, ... given their special character. ... Quite as human and racial as the ... ingenuity of their distinguished ... leader. There is a study also for ... the solemn commemorating the ... signing. The men are grouped in ... the stately and opulent Galeries des ... Glaces and the artist has seized his ... chance joyously and swept in the ... tall mirrors with their reflections, ... long flames of silver shooting up... ward above the deeply concerned ... and vivid faces of the men. The ... man in the street hardly would un... derstand the composition unless he ... also had once been a man in the ... palace. Mr. Johansen has paused as ... little as though he were dargent for ... the dotting of the "i's"; but the ... freshness and energy of the general ... effect are apparent to all art stu... dents.

Another interesting sketch is that of Mr. Volk's "King Albert," in which the careful modeling of the head is in contrast to the rapid nota... tion of the tall figure.

It was not to be expected that the public, or any one, not even the ar... tists, would have been satisfied with this group of sketches for the full fruit of their labors in response to the generous and high hearted im... pulse that provided for their going to Europe to make a pictorial record of the World War personages. But without this group of sketches the work is seriously incomplete. Wher... ever the portraits are installed in Washington, the sketches also should be installed, for sake of their incom... parable first-hand testimony and their value as art.

Other Exhibitions Now Open.

The exhibition of the New York Water Color Club closes Feb. 6, and a second visit has revealed beyond the general impression of color—no home is now without it—a few things that set their little pale faces reso... lutely against the richness of the color menu. The four pictures by Rene Clarke are for the gourmet in art, the gourmand would have none of them. Their delicate bones have little flesh to nibble at and the flavor would escape a palate whose sensi... tiveness has not been carefully con... served; but they are precious treas... ures for the man who likes them. In their pure light tints they take you back to the days of Rowland... son, whose dainty stainings of his paper contrast so amusingly with his stout and blustering design. Mr. Clarke has been more consistent and, of course, less piquant in uniting his austere design to the austerity of his color—"tinting" they would have called it in Victorian days. It is a pleasure to see this restrained and exquisite use of the loveliest of mediums returning, and it is a sur... prise to see how well the pictures with their frail anatomy and their faint washes of blue and violet, carry across the broad gallery in which they hang.

The Macbeth Galleries are showing their annual thirty paintings by Daingerfield and something by Dewey, if you wish a guide to the variation. Each is an excellent ex... ample of the artist, but Mr. Dewey's "The Harvest Moon" is subtle even beyond his usual reach. Compare it with the landscape by Albert P. Ryder, which is not in his best-known vein, and it will reveal greater sensitiveness and profounder depths. There are several land... scapes, "Approaching Rain" by J. Alden Weir, "Hemlocks: Winter" by John H. Twachtman, Wyant's "Grey Day" and one figure sub... ject, Dewing's "Pandora," which meet the modern turning toward art of a fastidious and personal kind to balance the increasingly robust public art now battering down the gates of prejudice that have protect... ed our ivory towers. The more we have of public art the more intensely shall we desire a little of that which is intimately our own, and the more exigent of its quality shall we be... come.

"Is the Corse," by George Luks.
In Exhibition at the Kraushaar Galleries.

At the Kraushaar Galleries is an exhibition of paintings by George Luks, that prince of painters, of il... lustrators, of caricaturists. His paint... ing is sound enough to last for cen... turies in spite of its dense impasto. With what a flourish he paints his white against white as though the greatest had not balked at it, as though it were as easy as it is to be Venetian and luscious. He illustrates life not as he find it, but as he seeks it: where Polish women dance, their lips a blur of crimson such as you deny when you see it in pictures until the pictures make you notice the gaping redness on the stage—and in the streets, where children, dirty and dear, embrace in corners or watch for pennies with knowing eyes and pouting, babyish mouths, where old women fill their arms with flowers, and bit white locks fall over their wrinkled foreheads. His car... icature is that of Daumier, called in to banish sentimentality, emphasiz... ing by the lightest pressure on the weak spots the ease with which hu... manity slips from the natural into the grotesque.

The present exhibition includes a flower subject, in which the artist proves what others talk about, the mystical kinship between the animal and vegetable worlds. "Yes! all things are our brothers and sisters," pronounces the Japanese modernist, Tsuni Kosumi. "All things, men, animals, plants, sun, mountains, rivers, and saying that a devil was in the house, and all the other servants ran away and so did small me, for the kolokodile looked very terrible indeed and I wondered if my master had not made a mistake and if it was not really a water-devil.

"And many times ten thousand people gathered in the street and around the house and the cook told them that a big water-devil had de... scended from a fiery cloud on which he had been riding and that he had come into the house, flames spurting from his mouth. Also that he rolled his eyes and smoke came from his nostrils and his tail was ten thou... sand lee—miles—long and he threat... ened to swallow the house and every... body therein. And the people made great outcry and the police came and formed a ring around the house which nobody was allowed to enter, and they sent for a sorcerer in the City Temple and they sent a messen... ger to my master saying that a devil had taken possession of his house and that he should beware and bring a foreign sorcerer along with him to exorcise the evil thing. And small me went among the people explain... ing that this surely was a very dan... gerous devil, for had not I seen the leg of a man which he had eaten hanging from his great and fearful snout? And the people shuddered and many made prayer and obeis... ance and they began beating gongs and they burned fire-crackers to chase away the devil by the noise, as is recommended by sorcerers.

"And my master came along in his chee-tse and a shimpoh—a police... man—approached him, warning him not to enter the house. But my master, who is very brave, made strong language, saying that there were no devils in his house in his absence. And he went into his house and with him went two shimpohs, who had rifles on which they had fastened long knives and the rifles were loaded and they trembled very much. And small me followed behind.

"And when we came to the kitchen, verily, there was the devil eating the meat the cook had left. And my master went to the devil and grasped him by the tail and lifted him up and spake very many hard words to the shimpohs, saying that this was not a devil but an animal from Yindoo and that he had bought it and that the shimpohs were great fool men and cowards. And then he went upstairs to his room and he laughed very much.

"And small me stood there with the two shimpohs, and one of them, whose name is Tung and who is a native of Tientsin, in the Province of Chili, spake thus: 'Verily, if we tell the people in the street that this is not a devil but an animal, then they will say we are afraid and we will lose face. What shall we do?'

"And small me, thinking to render a service to my master and to our... selves, spake thus: 'Why should we not tell the people that this is a very fearful and powerful devil, but that my master, who is a very strong soldier-tiger, made fight, and, assisted by us, subdued the devil after a ferocious battle?'

"And Tung, being thoughtful spake: 'Yes, this is good talk, but let us add that thy master not only subdued the devil but that he made him sign a contract to serve him and to devour all those people who did not obey the soldier-tiger, thee and the policemen.'

"And we all agreed and disar... ranged our clothing and small me killed a chicken in the kitchen and we spattered blood over our gar... ments and went outside the house where stood many ten thousand peo... ple. And they made great outcry when they saw us and asked what had befallen. And small me and Tung, the shim-poh, told them how my master had subdued the devil and how we had assisted him.

"And that the devil, after having been defeated, made obeisance and wept very much, saying that he was very sorry and that my master had made him sign a contract to help him and his friends and his servants and to kill all those who did not obey him or his servants or the po... lice. And small me said that we were entitled to a reward for hav... ing assisted to subdue the devil, and Tung and small me and the other shimpoh received three quans each, for the people, fearing our displeas... ure, collected money amongst them... selves. And there were many men from the Shin Wen Tss, the Chinese newspaper, and they too gave us money and wrote much on paper.

"And then they dispersed and spake much amongst themselves, and when small me went to the tea-house the same evening there were many people who wanted to hear the story again, and I received much wine and choice food and many quans.

* * * * *

"Verily, verily, may the King of the Dead take the souls of the wo... men and carry them to the Ink... kang, the great oven. Those women spake about the kolokodile my mas... ter had purchased against him wa... and some men of the foreign news... papers who had heard the story of the devil and did not know what it was, wrote stories about it for the foreign newspapers, making much fun of the tale of the devil and say... ing that small me, who gave such a good description of the fight, should receive much money for being a man of great imagination and for having entertained the people.

"And the next day my master called me and made very tall lan... guage and told me to stay away from his Presence, explaining that every... body in the foreign Ke-lee-pa was laughing at him and asking for the devil who had signed the contract.

"May the King of the Dead take the souls of the women. For, if it had not been for Woman then the cook would not have been the cook whom small me wanted to frighten away, and my master would not have bought the kolokodile and the foreign people would not have laughed at my master and my master would not have banished me from his pre... sence.

Red Cross in France and Britain

WITH THE DOUGHBOY IN FRANCE. By Edward Hungerford. New York: Macmillan Company.

THE PASSING LEGIONS. By George Buchanan Fife. New York: Macmillan Company.

AMONG the minor tragedies of the war must be counted the sudden cessation of public in... terest in almost all forms of war-inspired literature. This phe... nomenon, although easily explicable, is decidedly discouraging to those writers who have accepted the task of recording the war, so far as pos... sible, in its various aspects and phases. Every unit which played a part in the conflict has found, or will find, its historian, but their histories appear dedicated to con... temporary neglect. The bulk of the literature of the World War will go down to posterity unread by the gen... eration that assisted at its genesis.

One may be sure, for example, that these two volumes dealing with the work of the American Red Cross, although written in a "popular" style, will most certainly fail to win the popularity that their authors seek and that their contents merit. We have heard so much about the work that the Red Cross accom... plished in the war, and our convic... tion of its merit is so fortified by accumulated testimony, that we are tempted to pass by, with a more glance, any fresh contribution on the subject. Every one knows what the American Red Cross achieved. The debt has been fully acknowl... edged. Why talk about the matter any longer? Let us get on to some... thing new. Briefly expressed, this is the public attitude; but despite our satisfying belief that we know all that the Red Cross accomplished during the war, and our reasoning that any... books those two books will put the... down with his knowledge of the... just greatly increased and his ad... miration of our Red Cross vitalized anew.

Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Fife are seasoned journalists, and both pos... sess the art of vitalizing history, facts and dry statistics. The one is the historian of the American Red Cross in France; the other performs a similar service for our Red Cross in Great Britain. The two books are complementary and possess a com... parative interest. The inequality of subjects is not so great as might casually appear, for although the Red Cross in Great Britain was further removed from the battle lines than the larger organization in France, it accomplished a vitally necessary work that was not always free from danger and excitement. Mr. Fife's narrative is quite as in... teresting as Mr. Hungerford's, for the subject with which it deals is little known to most persons. The actual conflict in France drew our eyes away from fields of auxiliary activity.

In both France and England our Red Cross built upon the foundations laid by organizations that had pre... ceded it on the ground. In Paris good work had been done by the Ameri... can Clearing House; in England the American Red Cross Commission found the American Women's War Relief and the London Chapter of the American Red Cross functioning at top speed. It was on the foun... dations of these pioneer organizations that our Red Cross Commissioners reared their enormous superstructure. The Commission to France took over the Clearing House, equipment, funds and personnel, including the famous Morgan-Harjes Ambulance Service that had been established in the dark days of 1914. In England the Red Cross Commissioner united the work of the War Relief Fund and that of the London Chapter under a control... led control, and on that basis formed his plans for the natural and neces... sary expansion of his organization.

The British Grand Fleet in 1918.

After a Drawing in the Illustrated London News.

THE CRISIS IN THE NAVAL WAR. By Admiral of the Fleet Viscount Jellicoe of Scapa. With 5 Plates and 6 Charts. George H. Doran Company. $7.50.

"The Crisis of the Naval War," Viscount Jellicoe, Admiral of the Fleet, tells the story, largely technical but replete with human interest, of "the defeat of the enemy's submarine campaign, the gravest peril which ever threatened" the empire. Of the preparations and measures to check the depredations of the U-boats before the British merchant marine was reduced to impotence, nothing is left unnoticed. A great deal of space is given to organizations of convoys, escorts, patrols and mine-sweeping groups, and a long chapter is devoted to the co-operation of the United States after we entered the war. "Those responsible for the naval policy of the country," says Admiral Jellicoe, "conducted two wars simultaneously, the one on the surface and the other under the surface." He had already given an account of the operations of the Grand Fleet. Therefore, it does not figure much in the second book.

In the Autumn of 1916, when the Germans began to sink ships at the rate of more than 300,000 tons a month, the construction of new merchant ships was "exceedingly small," so that the outlook was very black. The people were not always taken into the confidence of the Admiralty. On Nov. 24 Lord Jellicoe accepted the post of First Sea Lord, and thereafter he devoted himself to dealing with the submarine menace. The Naval Staff was reorganized to cope with it. Admiral Sir Cecil Burney, a man of ideas and dispatch, being made Second Sea Lord at Admiral Jellicoe's request. In February the Admiralty was at its wit's ends to make a stand against the submarines. The enemy had 130 boats of all types available for sinking "without trace" in British home waters and about twenty in the Mediterranean. For offensive work the Admiralty began with the destroyers that could be spared from the Grand Fleet and special duty, but the number was small. The author admits that if the Germans had been more daring and shown more tactical skill nothing could have been done early in 1917 to save enough of the merchant fleet to insure steady delivery of food to the islands. He indulges in this speculation:

> There is no doubt whatever that had the German craft engaged in the unrestricted submarine warfare been manned by British officers and men, adopting German methods, there would have been few allied or neutral merchant ships left afloat by the end of 1917.

It may be observed that Lord Jellicoe is the kind of naval officer who would never have resorted to such methods. What he has in mind is that the British submarine officers during the war took more hazards than the enemy in attack, a view that is borne out by British audacity in the Heligoland Bight and in the Dardanelles. Traffic routes that could be fairly well protected were marked out for merchant ships and masters were ordered to zigzag in certain areas and cautioned to hug the coast when making coastal passages. Meanwhile the submarine hunters multiplied, many types of vessels being requestioned and built. Slow work was made in constructing submarines to fight the enemy, only two a month at first. The Germans built more rapidly. In 1916 and 1917 it took the British eighteen months to finish a destroyer, but it must be remembered that their yards were busy with orders for all kinds of craft, particularly merchant ships to supply losses. When America entered the war construction hummed on this side of the Atlantic. The Bethlehem Steel Company was turning out a destroyer in six weeks toward the end of the war.

There was a scarcity of depth bombs for sinking submarines. In April, 1917, the British, allied and neutral tonnage sunk by the Germans was 870,550. The British Navy seemed to be waging a losing fight. But it worked feverishly on new anti-submarine devices. Its plans included the manufacture of howitzers firing a shell to explode forty to sixty feet under the water, smoke apparatus to screen merchant ships from attack, increase of depth charges supplied to destroyers and all vessels in the hunt, the development of the hydroplane, decoy ships, net protection, and, of course, the laying of mines. Many people, says the author, had exaggerated ideas about the use of depth bombs and the havoc wrought by them. These bombs had to be dropped very close to a submarine to destroy it, a 300-pound explosion as near as fourteen feet, although a U-boat might be disabled when at a distance of twenty-eight feet. The hydrophone to locate submerged U-boats was an invention of slow growth, but late in 1917, owing to the directional kind, designed by Captain Ryan of the British Navy and the Board of Invention and Research, "hunting flotillas" were well supplied with listeners. They were often very effective. The supply rose to more than 5,000 by Dec. 31. Paravanes to cut mine cables saved many merchant ships. The defensive arming of such ships was complicated by a shortage of guns, the need of the fleet being very great. By Jan. 1, 1918, 4,407 howitzers had been mounted on mechant ship decks. Airships turned out to be more useful for patrolling for signs of submarines than for bombing them.

The romance of the hunt, which was generally a tedious and discouraging business, the decoy ships provided, and the hero of sinking by decoys was Captain Gordon Campbell, although other officers distinguished themselves. Equipped with concealed guns and masquerading as slow trading ships, the decoys sought the U-boat and sustained its gunfire, after sending away a boat crew to indicate abandonment, and not until the enemy craft ranged alongside, confident that no noncombatant ship could stand such heavy shelling, did the ports fly open and the offensive begin. Often the crew of the decoy suffered heavy casualties before the disguise was thrown off, but never a sound was heard from the riddled merchantman. Many stories are related of the success of this audacious device. For his gallantry Gordon Campbell won the Victoria Cross.

The British did not possess "a thoroughly satisfactory mine" for estuaries and submarine areas, like the entrance to the Channel, until some time in 1917, and production was not rapid. But good progress was made when the danger loomed greatest. In the fourth quarter of 1917 a total of 10,380 mines were laid in the Heligoland Bight and in the Straits of Dover. An order of 100,000 mines had been placed. When the United States came into the war its "immense manufacturing resources rendered a large production of mines an easy matter," and then a barrage across the northern part of the North Sea was planned and executed. Admiral Strauss, United States Navy, performed a large part of the work, but the British were not laggards. Lord Jellicoe doubts whether this barrage when completed late in the war was really worth the money and time spent upon it. His sincerity is not to be doubted, for the British share of the mine-laying was far from negligible, indeed was much greater than we understood in this country. The convoy system was another protection of slow growth, but it was very effective when once organized and put into operation. The warships engaged in convoy work zigzagged on the outside of the formation of merchantmen, ever on the alert to spot and attack submarines. To the convoy system the Allies owed the safe transportation of more than 2,000,000 American soldiers to France.

Lord Jellicoe hailed with joy the advent of Vice Admiral W. S. Sims in England, their friendship being of long standing and the Englishman's esteem for the ability of the American being very high. The author says:

> It was fortunate indeed for the allied cause that Admiral Sims should have been selected to command the United States forces in European waters, for to his qualifications he added a habit of speaking his mind with absolutely fearless regard of the consequences.

It is evident from Lord Jellicoe's observations about the co-operation of the American Admiral that the British Sea Lord must have aided with him in his controversy with the Navy Department at Washington. The chapter entitled "The Entry of the United States; Our Naval Policy Explained," should be read by every American who ever entertained the idea that the British Admiralty did not know its business and neglected any opportunity to beat and discomfit the enemy. Why offensives were not undertaken against German bases is made clear. On this point Lord Jellicoe says that he asked the critics in his own service to prepare plans to dig the enemy out, as Winston Churchill proposed, and the result was that the most persistent had to admit that the thing was impracticable and not to be considered seriously. Every British plan and secret was revealed to Admirals Mayo and Benson when they visited England. The particularity with which the author goes into policies and operations indicates that he wants critics of the British campaign against the U-boats to understand that nothing was left undone to assure success, which finally came.

The author does not describe in detail the attack upon Zeebrugge, the most gallant and desperate naval offensive of the war, apparently because Vice Admiral Sir Reginald Bacon, who was responsible for it, has written an admirable book about the Dover patrol. A matter of absorbing interest to readers of "The Crisis of the War" is the number of enemy submarines sunk and destroyed. In 1918 they were being disposed of at a lively rate. The figures are given from quarter to quarter in 1917-1918. The total actually "accounted for" is 156, but the author believes that the German losses should be estimated at 185, from first to last. The decoy ships sunk twelve and airplanes seven. Twenty were sent under by gunfire, ten were caught in nets, four were rammed by men-of-war other than destroyers. Admiral Jellicoe includes in his painstaking account of the campaign to defeat unrestricted submarine warfare some reflections about the future of the British Navy. His most significant judgment at this time is the following: "In framing our future naval policy it is obvious that we must be guided by what is being done abroad. We are bound to keep an absolutely safe margin of naval strength, and that margin must exist in all arms and in all classes of vessels." He protests that Great Britain must pay more attention than ever to its personnel, for the navy is a highly specialized service.

Current Magazines

AMERICANS are never averse to hearing the opinions of foreigners, especially those from the British Isles, regarding the life and letters of the New World. Perhaps we have not quite worked ourselves free from that provincialism that has so colored our literature in the past. But at the same time it is undoubtedly true that we may sometimes profit from the opinions of an outsider. At least he has a fresh view of us, nearly always untinged with prejudice. Therefore Mr. St. John Ervine's opinions, the first instalment of which appear in the February issue of The Century Magazine, are not without their value and interest. Mr. Ervine may well view this country with a kindly eye, for his three plays, "John Ferguson," "Jane Clegg" and "Mixed Marriage," have been received with open arms. Mr. Ervine himself, on his recent visit here, was the recipient of many gratifying honors. He was taken into our bosom without question. His opinions on our letters are the result of extensive reading while he was here and an honest attempt to gauge our accomplishment. In this first instalment he says (to pick at random some declarations):

> Walt Whitman, * * * five hundred years from now, may be seen to occupy in America much the same position that Chaucer occupies in England, the great forerunner of a great race of giants. * * * Mr. Winston Churchill, in my judgment, is a greater novelist than Mr. John Galsworthy, and Mr. Edwin Arlington Robinson is a more equal poet than Mr. John Masefield. I imagine that the aloof and austere verse of Mr. Robinson will make a stronger appeal to the regard of the American people when culture and tradition has become more surely fixed among them. He is likely to have greater posthumous fame than he has now, for it is only a people who have achieved poise and placidity of mind who can appreciate his grave beauty. Much that has been written by Mr. Booth Tarkington excels the work of the very many popular English writers. His book, "The Magnificent Ambersons," is a remarkably fine story and might, had he taken more care with it, have been a very great one. Mr. Ernest Poole, in "The Harbor," has written a book that will, I think, keep a strong hold on the affections of Americans for a considerable period. I have already stated my belief in the future of Miss Zona Gale, and in England Mr. Joseph Hergesheimer has a reputation which seems to be greater than he has at home. Mrs. Wharton's "Ethan Frome" has a quality that makes it more attractive than more ambitious books of hers, but even the least of her stories has a knowledge of human beings that makes it notable.

Speaking of older writers Mr. Ervine says:

> Longfellow does not appeal to me, but he was as meritable as Cowper and Southey and Thomas Moore. Mark Twain, whose writing is greatly admired by Mr. Bernard Shaw, as much for his style as for his humor, had not the rich variety of Charles Dickens; but he was not so far behind the English novelist that he is out of sight. * * * It seems to me that Twain's position among the English-writing novelists of the last sixty years is so high that he may be considered to be a great figure in imaginative literature, and certainly a pre-eminent figure among Americans.

It will be perceived that Mr. Ervine's opinions, on the whole, follow the conclusions already arrived at by many of our own critics, and that he merely emphasizes the fact that the time has come when we may stand squarely upon our own feet and satisfy ourselves with our own achievement.

Chesterton's Crusade

appear at intervals throughout the book. The picture of the tower of Godfrey of Boulogne, moving against the steep sides of Jerusalem, required and driven on again, of Godfrey mounting it until he sprang off it amid the hail of missiles, the first Christian in Jerusalem, is one that never was so painted before. He declares and undertakes to prove that the massacre which followed was as much a popular massacre as any that took place in the French or Russian Revolution. The crusade of Peter the Hermit was only a mob of the people, there were only nine knights in its 200,000. The one in which Godfrey captured Jerusalem was better officered, but the rank and file were pretty much the same, and when they entered Jerusalem they "did what they came to do." By way of proof Chesterton offers the facts that Tancred promised their lives to the Moslems in the mosque, but the mob "clearly disregarded him," and that Raymond of Toulouse himself saved those in the Tower of David and managed to send them safely with their property to Ascalon.

> But revolution with all its evil as well as its good was loose and raging in the streets of the Holy City. And in nothing do we see that spirit of revolution more clearly than in the sight of all those peasants and serfs and vassals in that one wild moment in revolt not only against the conquered lords of Islam, but even against the conquering lords of Christendom.

A remarkable chapter, a book in itself, which we have not space to review, is entitled "The Battle With the Dragon," and is on the present interest of science in spiritualism and the occult. He reminds us of the Victorian quarrel between science and Scripture, and of the great debate between Huxley and Darwin, and argues that everything Huxley felt sure of has been disproved. Science has given up its throne of authority by becoming agnostic, and questioning the very foundations, admitting not only that we have immortal souls but that perhaps we have tangible proof of it. This chapter is not written to discomfit the scientists of the present day, but to prove that on their own showing we are right in choosing our own belief, even if it includes miracles. It is based on the phenomena of levitation in the East, and on some things seen by Chesterton himself. If any one believes it can be dismissed with a smile, he should remember that it is Chesterton who makes the argument, and that the argument is put forward with all his skill and power.

FAGOTS OF FANCY

FAGOTS OF FANCY. By Scottie McKenzie Frasier. Introduction by Helen E. Woodruff. Wheeling, W. Va.: Progressive Publishers.

MRS. McKENZIE is a Southern woman who has done a good deal of newspaper work in New York. And now, returned to her home in the South, she has been writing poems in free verse, and sends out this little collection to take its modest place in the great new poetical movement in America whose richness, strength and variety are attracting much attention both in our own country and among the critics and readers of Europe. The opening verse, described as a "prayer-poem" and called "The Gifts," won the first prize in the poetry contest conducted two months ago by the Alabama Federation of Women's Clubs. It is, perhaps, in its simplicity, sincerity and earnest feeling the best in the collection:

> Give me work to do,
> Give me health,
> Give me joy in simple things,
> Give me an eye for beauty,
> A tongue for truth,
> A heart that loves,
> A mind that reasons,
> A sympathy that understands,
> Give me neither malice nor envy,
> But a true kindness
> And a noble common sense,
> At the close of each day
> Give me a book
> And a friend with whom
> I can be silent.

A little love song, written in rhyme and meter, has the simplicity and the lilting measure of song, and might easily be set to music. Its first stanza runs:

> I miss you in the morning,
> And at the close of day,
> I miss you in the springtime
> And along the moonlit way.

The verses are all marked by sincere feeling, simplicity of expression and love of beauty.

The Chicago Tribune calls it "A story of love that aspired, that suffered, and waited, that was half slain and was reborn; the story is of fairy creatures, and the whole thing is like shadows in a pool, beautiful and still, the perfect semblance of things that are."

The Boston Transcript calls it "A purple patch out of the age of chivalry—an exquisite tale that has the shimmering grace and spiritual charm of the romantic spirit of chivalry."

The New York Tribune says: "Beautiful in conception . . . the delicate imagery will haunt the reader as a delightful memory."

The Biggest Infantry Training School

The Tanks Lead the Assault, Closely Followed by Doughboys Using Marching Fire.

By FITZHUGH LEE MINNIGERODE

A MILITARY school unique in America and perhaps in the world is the United States Infantry School at Camp Benning, near Columbus, Ga. This school is the result of gradual development from a small departmental school established in 1907 at Monterey, Cal., and called at the time the School of Musketry. The initial purpose of the School of Musketry was to instruct selected officers and non-commissioned officers in firing problems, limited to the use of small arms—the rifle, the pistol and to a certain degree the machine gun.

The students taking the course of instruction usually consisted of ten or a dozen officers, mostly Lieutenants, and about sixty enlisted men. This period covered by the course was three months. From the very outset, even on this small scale, the school was productive of much good. The limited attendance was due to a lack of facilities for the accommodation of the men.

However, the War Department was quick to recognise the value of a careful and systematic course of training in small arms and in order to allow for the desired expansion the school was moved to Fort Sill, Okla. The name was changed to Infantry School of Arms, and officers and men from all over the United States—practically from every regiment—were ordered there for instruction.

The advent of the World War with the increased demand for training in small arms, coupled with the fact that the Artillery School of Fire was also located at Fort Sill, made it necessary that one of these schools be moved to a spot where conditions more ideal existed. Boards of officers examined many sites and the present Camp Benning was selected.

The tract of land on which the camp stands contains approximately 98,000 acres and is seventeen miles long and thirteen miles wide. The Chattahoochee River forms the west-southwest boundary. Practically every feature of terrain requisite for infantry training is to be found on the reservation. There is the river, one large creek and numerous small streams and lakes, affording ample water obstacles for the training of troops in crossing. There is hilly country, rolling and flat country, open and wooded land.

Climatic conditions are such as to permit out-of-door work all the year round and, as the school is primarily a school for practical rather than theoretical instruction, this is important—especially in the case of intensive military effort such as we were called upon to make during the World War.

The great size and wide diversity of terrain obviates the need for using the same ground repeatedly for field exercises.

One portion of the camp used for the instruction in rifle and pistol firing provides space where as many as 2,200 targets may be placed. This means that twelve hundred individuals may be shooting at the same time. There are also ranges for the firing of machine guns, hand and rifle grenades, Stokes mortars, automatic rifles and the 37 millimeter guns. Artillery and tanks may work out their problems simultaneously with the infantry. Also, while it is the American policy to emphasize in training open warfare or war of movement, trench warfare is recognized as a possibility and a complete system of trenches has been constructed.

In spite of many innovations which the late war brought about, American infantry places its greatest reliance upon the rifle and rifle fire to win battles, and therefore fire problems are given the first place in the Infantry School's work and fire training is conducted on a large scale.

The United States Army in the past has always suffered from the fact that it had no suitable ground for conducting exercises involving large forces. Sundry sites were tried at various times. Pine Camp, N. Y., Texas City, Texas—where a division was mobilized during the border troubles some years ago—Atascadero, Cal., and numerous other points, but these were lacking in most of the requirements needed for successful experimentation or manoeuvres. Camp Benning fills, therefore, a long felt want.

It is possible for three complete divisions, all auxiliary arms included, to operate simultaneously on the reservation. The terrain is also adapted to the actual use of artillery and machine guns for barrage work. The guns may be placed in position in rear of the infantry lines and at given signals at any hour of the day or night protective barrages may be put down in front of the infantry positions.

The area of Camp Benning is extensive enough to permit of the execution of problems covering several days' advance. This is a particularly valuable feature. Many officers who served in the World War are familiar with the confusion which inevitably followed the day's advance—the difficulty of consolidating the position won, preparing against counterattacks, digging in as a protection against hostile fire and planning for the next day's attack. At Camp Benning these things can all be taught with as near an approach to the conditions of the real thing as it is possible to create in times of peace.

At present about one thousand officers are on duty at Camp Benning, the greater part being students. The garrison consists of motorized infantry and artillery, light and heavy tanks, engineers, air service, with both heavier and lighter than air equipment, quartermaster corps, medical corps, signal corps and ordnance corps. These detachments are all used for the administration of the school or for demonstrations.

Attached to the school is an experimental division busily engaged in conducting tests of new inventions and innovations in warfare. These tests are exhaustive and noteworthy now is adopted until it has been thoroughly tried out and recommended.

Matters which affect the infantry arm are referred by the War Department to a board of officers officially called the Infantry Board. This board is a part of the Camp Benning personnel.

All officers attending school at Camp Benning do not take the same course. The last class contained a total of 602 officers. Ninety-one were taking the field officers' course, 82 the company commanders' course and 477 the basic course. There were present 42 officers of the National Guard taking a separate course for Guard officers. All student officers take the course proper for their grade. It is the purpose of the War Department to have every graduate of West Point take the course of training at the Infantry School upon his graduation and before reporting to a regiment for duty.

America has long been reproached for her unpreparedness. America is undeniably guilty, but behind it all is the unwillingness of Congress to make appropriations necessary to "carry on," rather than in any failure in the army. With meager funds and little encouragement the army has set to work to try and keep abreast of the great game of modern war. Camp Benning is a tremendously important cog in the machinery needed to keep up. It is teaching hundreds of officers and men not only how to fight but how to teach others to fight. It is a fighting school and as such it should take high rank in importance to the service at large.

The Days Before Yesterday

THE DAYS BEFORE YESTERDAY. By Lord Frederic Hamilton. London, New York, Toronto: Hodder & Stoughton.

SAUNTERING easily but not idly through life, with a keen but not malicious eye for his fellow-travelers, a memory that retains everything and its details, and a heart that is always childlike and never childish, Lord Frederic is a most agreeable old gentleman to know. And know him you do after reading the first chapter or two of his book. "Those who expect startling revelations," he says in his "foreword," "or stale whiffs of forgotten scandals in these pages, will, I fear, be disappointed, for the book contains neither." No, it might be Peter Pan's autobiography at the age of sixty-five.

Not that there is anything in the least unsophisticated about him. One does not gather that there is anything unsophisticated about Sir James Barrie. If he does not relate "forgotten scandals," it is because it is so much more agreeable to tell the story of the boy (his brother) who stood on his head in his kilt before the Queen when being presented, to that lady's great indignation, or of how Lord Frederic and his brothers hunted pirates on a raft which sank with the first push. These are real boys, with a most uncanny flavor of Tom Sawyer as Tom would have been if he had been born a Lord. Even after he leaves boyhood the child heart always stays with him, and throughout the book children appear, and he never loses his understanding of them. The author is even more delightful than the book, which has the flavor of "Trilby" without ever a sentence that might be accused of forcing the note, as perhaps Du Maurier's sentences might occasionally do.

The reminiscences begin in the '60s, when the author began to move about amid imperialism (French), royalty and nobility, as well as jockeys and coachmen, at the age of from 6 to 16. He was much in the society of elders, which sharpened his wits and must have given him an elfish wisdom, for they talked to him as if he were of their age; but he was the same boy who much envied the courage of the old housekeeper who could walk without fear down the dark corridor at the end of which barked gaseous and the stuffed crocodile who always came to life at night and ate human beings. He could never understand why she was afraid of cows, for he wasn't.

Later he went into public life as a Unionist, though he prefers to call himself a Tory, but always with the same light touch and love of fun. Anecdotes in plenty he gives of the noted men of his day, especially in the famous Parliament of 1886, but it is characteristic of him that he mentions none of those who were touched by scandal. He went into the diplomatic service, and managed to have a good time in Canada and India. It was as a youth that he gained his knowledge of France and Germany. He does not seem, at this late day, to have a prejudice left. He liked the Germans, and makes no bones of it, for the good time they gave him in Brunswick and Hamburg, and gives a most interesting picture of Heligoland while it was still a British possession, in name at least.

The London of 1876 "boasted an extraordinary constellation of lovely women," at the head of whom he places the "two peerless Moncrieffe sisters, Georgiana Lady Dudley and Helen Lady Forbes." In describing them he says, "Lady Forbes always wore her hair simply parted in the middle, a thing that not one woman in a thousand can afford to do, and glorious auburn hair it was, with a natural ripple in it." He says:

I do not think any one now could occupy the commanding position in London which Constance Duchess of Westminster and the Duchess of Manchester (afterward Duchess of Devonshire) then held. In fact, with skirts to the knee, and an unending expanse of stocking below them, it would be difficult to assume the dignity with which these great ladies in their flowing Victorian draperies swept into a room. * * *

London society was so much smaller then that it was a sort of enlarged family party, and I, having six unmarried sisters, found myself with unnumbered hosts of relations and connections. I retain delightful recollections of the mid-Victorian girl. These maidens, in their airy clouds of white, pink or green tulle and their untouched faces, had a delicately fresh, flower-like look which is wholly lacking in their sisters of today. A young girl's charm is her freshness, and if she persists in coating her face with powder and rouge that freshness vanishes, and one sees merely rows of rapid Tiller doll-like faces, all absolutely alike and all equally artificial and devoid of expression.

In that decade, wherein fell Lord Frederic's early twenties, there was "a wonderful galaxy of talent at the old Gaiety Theatre," Nellie Farren, Kate Vaughan, Edward Terry, and Royce forming a matchless quartette. He tells this story of the social war which the actresses here awoke:

Young men, of course, will always be foolish up to the end of time. Nellie Farren, Kate Vaughan and Emily Duncan all had their "colors." Nellie Farren's were dark blue, light blue and white; Kate Vaughan's were pink and gray; Emily Duncan's black and white; the leading hosiers "stocked" silk scarves of these colors, and we foolish young men bought the colors of the lady we especially admired, and sat in the stalls of the Gaiety flaunting the scarves around our necks. As I then thought, and still think, that Nellie Farren was one of the daintiest and most graceful little creatures ever seen on the stage, I, in common with many other youths, sat in the stalls of the Gaiety wrapped in a blue and white scarf. Each lady showered smiles over the footlights at her avowed admirers, while contemptuously ignoring her rival's colors. One silly youth, to testify to his admiration for Emily Duncan, actually had white kid gloves with black fingers specially manufactured for him. He was, we hope, repaid for his outlay by extra smiles from his enchantress.

He explains the decline in parliamentary reporting by saying that editors publish what is interesting to their readers. He entered Parliament in 1885, when the fullest reports of parliamentary proceedings were given. "Now the most popular newspapers give the scantiest and baldest summaries of proceedings in the House of Commons." When he entered the House alongside of his three brothers, "there were commanding personalities and great orators: Mr. Gladstone, John Bright, Joseph Chamberlain, Lord Hartington, Henry James and Randolph Churchill." The House filled immediately when any of them arose, and hundreds of thousands read and discussed their speeches next day. "Nowadays proceedings in Parliament seem to be limited to a very occasional solo from the one star performer, the rest of the time being occupied by uninteresting interludes by his understudies, all of which may serve to explain the decline in public interest." It may explain it in the United States, too. As for the orators:

I only heard Mr. Gladstone speak in his old age, when his voice had acquired a slight roughness which detracted, I thought, from his wonderful command of oratory. Mr. Gladstone, too, had certain peculiarities of pronunciation; he always spoke of "constitooshonal" and of "nooss." John Bright was a most impressive speaker, he obtained his effects by the simplest means, for he seldom used long words; indeed, he was supposed to limit himself to words of Saxon origin, with all their condensed vigor, as per Newman's hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light," considered to be a model of English, as it is composed almost entirely of monosyllables, and, with six exceptions, of words of Saxon origin. John Bright's speaking had the same quality as Cardinal Newman's hymn; in spite of his eloquence, John Bright's prophecies were invariably falsified by subsequent events.

I have never heard any one speak with such facility as Joseph Chamberlain. His utterance was so singularly clear that, though he habitually spoke in a very low voice, every syllable penetrated to all parts of the House. When Chamberlain was really in a dangerous mood his voice became ominously bland and his manner quieter than ever. Then was the time for his enemies to tremble. I heard him once roll out and demolish a rear, facile-tongued professional agitator so completely and remorselessly that the unfortunate man never dared to open his mouth in the House of Commons again.

He and his youngest brother, both members of the House, used to beguile their leisure by tricycle rides up and down the long river terrace, and then projected a "Soulful Song Cycle." Lord Frederic wrote the first one of the series, entitled "The Listless Frenzy," of which he says:

It was, and was intended to be, utter nonsense, devoid alike of poetry, sense and of meaning. I quoted the "Listless Frenzy" one night to "Intense" and gushing lady as an example of the pitiable rubbish dominant minor poets were then turning out. It began:

Crimson wreaths of passionate flowers
Down in the golden glen;
Silvery sheen of autumnal showers—
When, my beloved one, when?

She assured me that the feeling in myself, not in the lines; that I was of too material a temperament to appreciate the subtle beauty of ee-and-oo's work. I forget what I had attributed the verses; but I felt quite depressed at reflecting that I was too material to appreciate the lines I had myself written.

Of all the characters that pass in review none is more interesting than his mother, the Duchess of Abercorn; and it is characteristic of the lovable author that the frontispiece of his book is the picture, not of himself, but of her—and holding in her arms her grandson's grandson. She died at 92, having then 169 living descendants, from children to great-great-grandchildren, and eighty-seven grandchildren and great-grandchildren by marriage. He records that she kept in touch with them by correspondence, "and the advice given by this shrewd, old counselor, with her ripe years of experience, was invariably followed by its recipients."

He made a point of traveling to London to attend the weddings of every one of her descendants," and proposed to the end the full use of every intellectual faculty and with the powers of enjoyment and of unabated interest in the lives of others still retained. Once, finding her eyesight failing, she traveled to London to consult an oculist, whom she said that she began first it difficult to read small print by lamplight. After examination he asked her age, and being told informed her "that his experience had led him to believe that causes of failing eyesight were by no means usual at that age"—ninety!

Lord Frederic himself writes of, an age which he calls "the mellow golden sunshine of the still later days," and says that in sunshine "it is sometimes difficult to realize that the glory of the year has passed beyond recall," him, evidently, that realization he long in coming.

me this letter for a couple of days. I want to show it to an editor—a friend of mine."

"Who might the editor be?" I asked, knowing sundry of that black ilk.

"Chumley of the Universal Publishing Company," said she. "Do you know him?"

"Er—yes," I said—"slightly."

As if matter of fact, I knew the said Chumley quite well. For years I had been bringing him stories that positively glowed with color—local, foreign and domestic. Plots I had laid bare before him—aye, and counterplots that made Dumas, senior and junior, look like Mother Goose. Palpitating with tense human passions, writhing in the throes of terrific love interest, my superhuman heroes and lovably sweet heroines had passed, pageanting, before his unheeding, heartless gaze. And all the said cur, Chumley, had said was, "Sorry, Bob—not for us."

That afternoon I left Amanda sitting on the stile with my children's letter (she simply refused to give it back to me) and went home to my family.

Three days later, rooting among some drawers in the hall bedroom which I call my study, I came upon a large pile of notes which I had overlooked in the general clean-up. Sadly sentimental I read them over. They seemed better than ever. Among them was the draft of a tragedy in nine chapters whose climax showed the love and the faithless lass, reconciled in the end, throwing themselves into the river together. It was beautiful. Then there was a series of sonnets which any—

I was interrupted in my reading by some one knocking on the door.

"Come in," I said.

The maid entered with a letter. On the outside of the envelope was printed, "The Universal Publishing Company—The Universal Magazine." It was from Chumley. I felt so

Dazed, I looked around the study. Then I gave one wild cry, like a wounded animal. I ripped the [illegible] up in nine chapters to shreds and threw it in a shower upon the floor. Woman at the Ring Side

WOMAN'S place is at the ring side. This is the dictum of 1921, at least for a part of New York society."

Boxing has come back to legitimacy in New York State, into a world that has decided that it is not only permissible for enfranchised women to attend fights, but even a bit "smart." Boxing had been out a while for a squeamish part of the world, which had decided that the fight was crude and vulgar—certainly no place for a lady. Those were the dark days of the sport, when roughly clad men gathered by night in some pseudo-athletic club to look on at and to gamble upon the fight thing. The nearest the ladies ever got to that phase of boxing was a George Bellows lithograph.

But now boxing has come back to a different world—a world of mole-skin stoles and of violets, of ornate frontal, of men in dinner coats, and of waiting limousines.

Largely this new appearance of fashionable women at fights is imported from England and France. In England itself, native soil of the sportswoman, the new feminine sport of attending fights is no older than the war. So testifies Captain E. V. Chandler, heavyweight champion of the British Army, who came to New York for the championship bout of the International Sporting Club on Jan. 17. This was the fight, by the way, that was attended by so many "society women" that it called the attention of the land to the new feminine rôle of "fight fan."

The English lady of fashion, it seems, got the habit while she was a nurse or an aid or a canteen worker, or some of those things that brought her in close contact with the army. Those were the wartime days when the boxing ring had ceased to be a business for tough, cauliflower-eared professionals and a hangout for gamblers. Boxing had come back to the primal purpose for which all sport was invented, the fitting of man's body and spirit for the serious business of war. Anyway, Miss Mid-Victorian had been dead some years; sensibilities and "vapours" were quite out of vogue; a mere bleeding nose meant nothing to the woman who had learned to tend wounds.

Therefore the Englishwoman took kindly to the manly art. After the war was over she kept on liking it—until now a boxing bout in London is as much a society event as the opera. And, because the society woman went, the woman who read the society news about the society woman went, too.

The French tale is a bit different, though the outcome of popularizing Le Box has been the same. It is the story of Carpentier, idealized and adored as a sort of superstage nationalized matinee idol. Carpentier was such a "gentleman." Didn't he even produce a glowing war record and a decoration that justified the institution of boxing as a man-builder? Any woman felt justified in attending Le Box—and from just such women the custom of attending fights leaked up to the "indies."

Meanwhile in New York State the ground was being prepared for the return of the professional prize-fight by our own war. The "manly sport of boxing" was taught to our infantry soldiers to fit them for hand-to-hand combats. Such men as Theodore Roosevelt and Admiral Sims were advocating the law which should bring professional fights back to respectability and legality. And, when that law was finally passed, less than a year ago, it was quite unexpectedly discovered that the women had caught the fever from the French bourgeoisie and from English society alike—as a trip to Madison Square Garden will show you on a night when the fight fans are gathering.

For scattered through the audience are all grades of femininity—from the stout blond sportswoman who sits on the bleachers at the races and gets her "tips" from a friend that's married to a jockey, to a box full of the best New York society. The Roosevelt family, by the way, are indefatigable fight fans. Boxing bouts have been taken up by all sorts of women—from Anne Morgan, who would turn their proceeds into the useful channels of war relief, to the two little shopgirls, powdering their noses at the Garden, who have been brought by their men friends to see the show.

And we are all of us—all of us women, that is—being welcomed by the men. That's the joke on them. Get a man to start a discussion in any part of the audience (fight audiences, understand, don't wait for introductions), and you'll learn that, down in their hearts, three-fourths of the men would rather not have us there. It was the one place left inviolate in business or pleasure that was still No Woman's Land. "I'd hate to think of my mother here," they remark, just as they did when men argued that it would not be ladylike for a woman to go to the polls—only to add cautiously, "Not that I have any real argument against women at fights."

For the first time we've broken in on a perquisite of man, without his even putting up a struggle—and that for two reasons. The first reason is that the fans are so busy insisting that there is nothing brutal in the sport, lest again it be put in bad odor with the makers of blue laws, that it cramps their style in explaining why the women should not be present. And, secondly, these same equality-demanding women now help make the laws. Never was mere man so up a tree.

Therefore we are being accepted somewhat as honored guests by the very general public of the ringside.

"Hi, there! Hats off in front!" brays a voice ten seats in the rear. And, as feminine hands are raised, the same voice brays out, "Not you, lady; just gents' derbies."

"That's right; smash him in the kisser!" excitedly shouts the fat male who bellows over the seat of the small female, then turns politely to the small female. "Pardon me, ma'am, but, does my cigar smoke annoy you?"

The same dual nature is found, even in the headquarters of the International Sporting Club, in the mind of its founder and managing director, William Gavin, who admittedly was the greatest influence in bringing about the New York State law that now permits fights.

"Pardon me, Ma'am, does my smoke annoy you?"

"Give me some good reason why women should'nt attend fights?" he asks smiling. "The whole history of civilization could be written in terms of allowing woman this or that sport privilege. In the beginning of the world she was robbed of this joy, because her task was merely to prepare the food and to bear the children—while sport—why, it was invented to fit man for the fight and for the hunt.

"In the croquet period, sport for women was at its lowest ebb. Now the tide is full. And the turn of the tide, understand, was when Florence Nightingale proved that women belonged in man's fiercest struggle. In this last war women showed that they could go through the most bloodcurdling situations with a coolness envied by men. Why, it's perfect nonsense to talk about their being shocked at a clean, scientific fight. Look at my wife. She's been hunting in South Africa—has in her possession the second finest lion's head on record. Heard him roaring in the night, when the rest of the party were asleep, and went out with a gun by herself. Horribly daring thing to do, but she brought him down. That's the kind of women we've got these days."

"Then you haven't any prejudice against women going to fights?" He grinned at his own discomfiture. "To confess the truth, I have a certain prejudice. However," more briskly, "I'll get over it—will have to get over it, just as men have had to get used to seeing women smoke. It's wrong and selfish, and nobody but an old crab wants to keep women away from a perfectly innocent amusement, because of prejudices left over from a period when boxing was on a less sportsmanlike plane. Women are at the fights to stay because they like it."

Women are at the fights to stay, one of them would like to add, because at a boxing bout no special education is required to understand what is going on, because what the contestants are trying to do to each other is so direct and simple. The uninitiated lady asks no questions of her escort. That alone should be enough to give permanency to the new custom of taking her. The contestants so conveniently carry their goals with them that she can't get mixed up about which side is winning. And, even if she does lose count, there are the simple remarks of her neighbors to save the day.

"Yous is wasting my time," from a man behind her informs her that the action's slow. While the next door neighbor who remarks with gusto, "Now he's got eight rounds under his belt, he'll open up the short guy's nose," serves as libretto. Woman may sit without questions while the fight lasts, and then tell her escort afterward, looking up in his face significantly, that she does love a big strong man.

That, in itself, gives "fight fanning" standing as a sport, for women. For each new sport for women, in the final analysis, rises or falls according to whether it assists her in her original primeval sport, the winning of favor in man's eyes.

Usually a game has grown fashionable and popular for women in the ratio of the becomingness of the costume it fostered. Never was medieval lady more graceful than when on her slim wrist perched her pet hawk—while the entire huntswoman spirit of the Renaissance culminated in the Court of Charles II. in having your portrait painted as Diana with a bundle of arrows.

True, the curtain-raisers for each new sport, the first doughty adven-

Scientist Among the Rockies

WAITING IN THE WILDERNESS. By Enos A. Mills. Illustrated from photographs. New York: Doubleday, Page & Co. $2.50.

THOSE of us whose daily horizon is limited by the sharp, uncompromising angles of city streets, whose ears are forever filled with the rumble of traffic or the jangle of telephone bells, who seldom escape from the rush of crowds, can find relaxation—even exhilaration—in the pages of Enos A. Mills's most recent book, "Waiting in the Wilderness."

These tales of the author's adventures among the peaks of the Rocky Mountains and on the Western plains are as refreshing to the city-weary reader as any vacation by proxy could possibly be. Mr. Mills is a scientist, a naturalist with considerable knowledge of geology, who has spent most of his days in the open. Coupled with the wide knowledge of the ways of wild folk that he has gathered during his years of observation is the author's rare capacity for dramatizing that knowledge, and the even rarer ability of imprisoning in cold print much of the zest, the thrill and urge of outdoors. The most closely kept secrets of nature and nature's children are as an open page to Mr. Mills. He has encountered nature in her most desperate as well as in her softest moods. For years he has been reading the stories that the trained observer of animals can find written in the snow or mud, and in his present book he passes some of these romances on to his readers.

There is an extraordinarily wide range to the material in "Waiting in the Wilderness." A chapter on the black bear, that "Happy Hooligan of the Woods," is followed by a description of the author's narrow escape from death before the fury of a great snowslide, and preceded by another on "Camping on the Plains."

In his opening chapter Mr. Mills sets the reader's blood coursing faster by a graphic description of a climb he took into heights where storms roar their loudest, on the very crest of the Continental Divide. Standing far above timberline, with one foot on the Atlantic slope and the other on the Pacific slope, the author looked one hundred miles out to either side of him. To the east lay the brown plains of Colorado; to the west stretched limitless snowdrifts. "What a place to coast!" exclaims the author. The very roof of the world! And coast he did, with a vengeance, as witness the following stimulating paragraph:

> Wading out into the snow, I sat down on my snowshoes and away we went, coasting toward Pacific sea level. Of course I exceeded the speed limit. The smooth slope dropped nearly a thousand feet in half a mile. Toward the bottom I struck the smoothest place of all. Here was a spring that had overflowed before the snow fell and coated the slope with almost smooth ice. Over this icy slope I went like a rocket. Near the bottom it flattened out abruptly and I was shot several feet into the air over a rainbow pathway—like a football kicked for a goal. * * * After twenty or thirty feet through the air I came back to earth and swept forward and downward at a hair-raising pace. One of the dwarfed little trees that barely stuck up through the snow caught into my snowshoe and hung on. The shoe was torn off and left hanging on the treetop, while I tumbled head over heels into four feet of snow. * * * I looked back up the slope along the mark I had made. It would be sundown in about two hours, and it would take about that long to climb up to the place where I had started to coast.

The following chapter is less exciting, but no less entertaining. It relates how the author went hunting, with a pick, for geologic animals with five-jointed names, fossils of strange creatures that died a million-odd years before Mr. Mills started to hunt them. In telling of what he found, the author incidentally lets drop a great deal of information rather surprising to the reader not familiar with the wild life of the Eocene, Miocene, Oligocene and other periods of geologic time designated by equally learned names. For example, did you ever know that camels originated and developed in America and that rhinoceri once wandered over the so-called land bridges that connected America, Asia and Europe, and roamed over what is now the State of Colorado?

In his chapter on "Celebrating Ground-Hog Day," the naturalist explodes forever the persistent myth that if this animal comes out on Candlemas Day from the hole in which he has been hibernating throughout the Winter and sees his shadow on the snow there will be six more weeks of Winter. Before deciding against the little animal's legendary powers as a prophet of the weather, Mr. Mills made a prolonged study of his actions over a period of several years. In recording his observations of the wilderness meeting places of the ground-hog and his neighbors, the author shows him to us playing his primitive games, fighting his grim battles, hunting his food and courting.

When we reached the heading "Pirates in the Mountains" we were prepared for a chapter of adventures as lurid as were ever seen in any movie thriller. To our surprise, the "pirates" of the heading proved to be rivers. There could be no better evidence of the interesting manner in which Mr. Mills writes than the fact that he makes a river as interesting as any human bandit ever was. The pirate streams which he succeeds in endowing with personalities are liquid saws, toothed with sharp sand and gravel, that in the course of centuries have sawed their way through hard rock; through mountains, even, and "captured" and "beheaded" other rivers. The kind of "capture" referred to takes place when one river digs a deeper, lower channel than that of another river and then "beheads" the second stream by appropriating to its own aggrandisement the water supply of its victim. The Yellowstone River is one of the liveliest pirates studied by the author. This stream cut through an entire plateau and captured, not a rival river, but Yellowstone Lake. In its titanic conquest it formed the Yellowstone Canyon, in which is one of the widest waterfalls in the country. Before its capture the waters of Yellowstone Lake flowed through the Snake River to the Pacific. Now they go down the Yellowstone-Missouri-Mississippi to the Atlantic Ocean.

The piracy of one river nearly resulted in war between the Argentine Republic and Chile. A Chilean river on the Pacific slope of South America worked headward and sawed through the Continental Divide. It beheaded a stream on the Atlantic slope and diverted its waters from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The original Continental Divide was the boundary line between these two nations, and this piece of river piracy moved the boundary line and threw the two powers into angry confusion. After much searching and surveying the Continental Divide was found and a new boundary agreed upon.

Every stream, Mr. Mills points out, is more or less of a land pirate, grabbing pieces of the earth and washing them into the maw of the sea. The Appalachian Mountains, for example, are now only about one-third of their original height. They have had about two miles washed off them. The rivers of the world daily carry away as many tons of washed material as all the railroads move of their kind of freight. This material is deposited in deltas, which sometimes rise again above sea level. The City of Adra on the Po River, in Italy, used to be at the mouth of the river. Now it is fourteen miles from the sea. In China generations ago the City of Ju-tai was a seaport at the edge of the ocean, but running water has built a large delta beyond it until it now stands forty-eight miles inland.

Readers of Mr. Mills's former books know that he is a leading authority on beaver life. They will not be unduly surprised, therefore, by his account of a journey he made by pack horse over the old Lewis and Clark trail across the mountains of Colorado with a tamed baby beaver for companion. Of this unusual pet he writes:

> I finally gave him the name Diver. This name he quickly learned, and never failed to come when I called or when I whistled for him. * * * Now and then he would swim across a pond to visit another beaver. * * * Strange as it may seem, he never showed a desire to remain with his kind.

In "Camping on the Plains" the author tells of visits he paid to prairie dog cities, of how he stalked antelope with a camera, of dramas of coyote life which he watched enacted and, finally, of how he became snow-blinded when alone in the mountains and managed to grope his sightless way down precipitous slopes by feeling of trees and determining directions from the manner in which their branches grew. In passing, he ridicules the idea of owls, rattlesnakes and prairie dogs sharing the same burrow, a story which has been repeated countless times.

Space is all too short to permit of more than a bare enumeration of the many fascinating chapters in "Waiting in the Wilderness." This whole review could be devoted to a repetition of the author's experiences in trailing mountain lions to study their habits of life without exhausting the more entertaining paragraphs. The chapters on black bears and on grizzlies and on snowslides could also stand lengthy treatment. Particularly stirring are one or two chronicles of fact, such as "Following a Concealed Trail," the story of how a posse of cowboys tracked a bank thief; and "A Blind Guide," which relates one Lou Crandall's hair-breadth escape from death at the hands of Blackfoot Indians. "Bill McClain—Prospector" tells the story of a miner who befriended an outcast dog, which later repaid him for his protection by saving his life. "A Wild Thoroughbred" relates how kindness softened the spirit of a noble wild horse after brutal methods of horse-breaking had failed utterly to subdue him. In "An Open Season on Nature Stories," Mr. Mills dissipates many prevalent but erroneous beliefs about wild life. Among these is the generally held impression that when the grizzly bear comes out of his Winter quarters he is ravenous, savage and dangerous. As a matter of fact, says Mr. Mills, the grizzly does not eat for ten days or longer after leaving the shelter in which he hibernates throughout the Winter. "He is not hungry. He is fat and strong from long sleep and rest; and, besides, his stomach is so nearly closed from long disuse that he could hardly eat a snowbird."

The most unusual chapter in the book is "A Collie in the Desert." It is a unique biography of an actual animal whose life history parallels the history of the dog hero of Jack London's "The Call of the Wild." When a puppy, this collie was turned out on the Arizona desert to shift for himself. With generations of development and intimate association with man behind him, the dog found himself in an environment wholly unsuited to all his inherited instincts. These instincts urged him to shepherd a flock and serve a master, but there were no flocks to be shepherded and no master who wanted his devotion. Adrift in a world utterly alien to his breed, he took up life with the coyotes, chose a mate from among them, and rose to leadership through sheer force of his superior strain. Several times in the course of his curious, misfit life his instincts called him to duty with mankind, but each time some circumstance interfered to prevent his permanent adoption of domestic dog life. The story is as moving as good fiction, and has a denouement as dramatically satisfying as any fiction to be found in the best magazines. It is written with a poignancy and sympathy for the forlorn, outcast collie suggestive enough of the best work of Charles G. D. Roberts to make the reader wish that Mr. Mills would try his hand at some out-and-out animal fiction. The writers of this type of story are so few that an addition to their ranks would be welcome.

"Black bear cubs are very friendly little chaps and will even drink milk from a can."

"Waiting in the Wilderness."

"After seven years of getting acquainted a Bighorn eats salt from the hand of Enos A. Mills."

"Main Street" Through the Ages

the early Britons' ceaseless plowing and sowing, reaping and mowing. With a preacher's love of moralizing, he attributed the plight of villagers to "their hatred of truth and love of falsehood."

In one expression of spiritual beauty, at least, the villagers of Britain have surpassed the people of Main Street—architecture. The growth of Gothic art owes very little to any influence foreign to English villagers.

"It was not imported by masons brought over from France," writes the author of "Old Village Life," "but was conceived, developed and perfected by our own people. It was no exotic art, no alien welcomed to our shores, but a true English native art, born in the brains and faith of our English forefathers and nourished with a nation's wholehearted affection."

Any reader who has had an opportunity to compare the unrelieved ugliness of Main Street—be it in the Middle West, in New England or on the Coast—with the charm of a medieval English town—and who has not had such an opportunity, through photographs, at least?—needs no word from the reviewer to convince him that the booby prize goes to Main Street.

As for the intellectual life in a twentieth century English town, Dr. Ditchfield says: "Most self-respecting villages now possess a club and reading room, and 'whist 'drives' and other forms of rational amusement are as common as blackberries."

How much those reading rooms may be used or what is read in them he does not suggest. Nor does he give any idea of the culture of the members of the club and of those who go to the whist "drives." Doubtless they are spiritual brothers of the inhabitants of Main Street. The reviewer, for one, has no desire to investigate at first hand. His sentiments are all with the man who, when asked where he'd like to live if he couldn't live in New York, answered:

"Blackwell's Island! That's the closest thing to it!"

DANERSK FURNITURE

IT is easy to illustrate and advise expensive interiors. The difficult thing is to achieve real individuality at a moderate price.

For the dining room nothing is more interesting than a Danersk Draw Top Table. It has all the historic value of the ancient refectory table and greater convenience than a modern extension table. In fact it is the earliest form of extension table devised by man. Quaint English dressers and serving tables, comfortable little Farthingale chairs with upholstered seats, or your choice of early vase-backs, hand-made English Windsors, or rush seated chairs, finished in rich-toned walnut, will give a distinction to your dining room that is unique.

Call without obligation to purchase and see our many charming groups for all the rooms of the house.

February Sale of Lamps, Shades and Furniture

EACH and every February sees the price of each and every Ovington lamp and shade discounted.

LAMPS AND SHADES
reduced by 10% to 50%

This year the reductions range from 10% to 50% and these reductions, be it remembered, are taken from prices which are recognized the country over as being reasonable and fair.

FURNITURE
reduced by 10% to 20%

This February brings this innovation that all Ovington furniture is also reduced in price by 10% to 20%.

And in furniture, as in lamps, more important than the discounts is the character of each thing shown.

All Ovington lamps and shades are included from the tiniest boudoir lamp to the most stately floor standard, all of them reduced by 10% to 50%.

The policy of good materials and sound values obtains all year 'round at Ovington's.

Ovington's showing of console tables, tea wagons, tip tables, muffin stands, etc., is probably unique in New York. And their discounts from 10% to 20% during February.

PHONOGRAPH

The Aristocrat of Phonographs

Highly Endorsed

MUSIC lovers everywhere highly endorse the tone supremacy of the Widdicomb.

This is due to the new Widdicomb Amplifying Tone Chamber—an exclusive feature. The Widdicomb Tone Chamber gives full value to the lower as well as to the higher musical tones.

And when playing an orchestral record the deeper, richer notes are given equal prominence.

These are the reasons why phonograph experts speak highly of the Widdicomb. Furthermore, they say it has no close rival as a true interpreter of music. Hear it play—all records.

"John Hawthorne."

SHAW, by the way, retrieved "Widowers' Houses" from his [illegible] ink that time because of his [illegible] complicated sympathy with Mr. Green, who, in directing the Incohesit Theatre, could find available [illegible] plays at all of native authorship. [illegible] somewhat similar difficulty has [illegible] during our own kindred institution, the Theatre Guild. It seems [illegible] that none of our established [illegible] has been pressing masterpieces on the Guild's directors, not [illegible] of any fear that they would [illegible] them well, but because of the [illegible] that the Guild's grim determination [illegible] the five plays a year would [illegible] their royalties far below the [illegible] expectations held out by [illegible] confessedly commercial theatre. [illegible] by the Guild has relied largely [illegible] on authors, and their three [illegible] successes have been [illegible] by plays by Irish dramatists [illegible] which habitat-plays, moreover, [illegible] either from timidity or from [illegible] lack of alertness, had been [illegible] by other American producers. [illegible] for their consequent predilection for [illegible] authors the Guild directors have [illegible] included in the prattle of the uncomprehending, and, seemingly stung [illegible] a little by such criticism, they appear [illegible] have been snatching for any half-[illegible] promising pieces of hundred per [illegible] American authorship. Just why, [illegible] this process, they have thus far [illegible] to snatch any of the plays by [illegible] Eugene O'Neill takes a good deal of [illegible] explaining. But their nervous need [illegible] account in some measure for their [illegible] production of "John Hawthorne," [illegible] with they came a fearful crop-[illegible] last week, to the considerable satisfaction, no doubt, of all those who [illegible] entered St. John Ervine's slightly [illegible] endlessly partial description of the Guild as writing in [illegible] shorthand "the only first-rate theatrical organ-of his own in a mysterious notebook [illegible] in the world."

This "John Hawthorne" was an [illegible] the result [illegible] matter, be [illegible] faction, no doubt, of all those who the sedulous gloom was unrelieved by enough skill or conviction to make the subjects of its melancholy seem to matter. Its unhappy puppets were obliged to utter (or rather chant, for the direction was quite rhythmic) sentiments wherein much unsuspected humor lurked. Thus the première was marked by explosions of embarrassing but richly deserved and essentially tonic laughter. For instance, when John Hawthorne brought a long scene of tedious woe to an end by ejaculating in accents of pseudo-realism, "Let's eat," his plea for something nourishing so exactly expressed the feelings of the audience that there were mutinous chuckles all about. After John Hawthorne had murdered his lady's husband and interred his remains down behind the coal-bin, some imp at the author's elbow bade the shocked lady object gravely and patiently: "But that is not holy ground." Which sentiment ruinously recalled the history of the Crippen case written years ago by W. E. Hill, the cartoonist, who, in penning an imaginary letter from that murderous and fugitive dentist, had him say: "I want you to believe in my innocence. I want you to know in your heart that Belle died natural, but that she had always expressed a desire to be buried in the cellar."

Listening.

IN the first act of the play at the Belasco, after the performance of the pantomime, the home-bound Deburau is caught by a nameless admirer who has lurked in the theatre after the scattering of the audience. She was waiting less to see him than to hear him. Her greeting runs:

Remember, nobody hears you speak.
It's uncanny to have so much said
To one in silence. So, if I saw you close,
I thought—forgive me—it might break the spell.
Or if you wove another one—well—?

And Deburau makes answer:

How good of you! I know it must seem a freak
Of nature to be able to hold one's tongue.
D'you want to know how I do it? It's simple:
Go and sit among
Your friends and follow the thread
Of their talk. If you can get them to talk about you
So much the better. The whole thing lies
In the art of listening.

With this much of a hint from the pantomimist himself, most playgoers probably notice how large a part this listening plays in the performance of "Deburau" itself, how, in the two long and difficult speeches—the one where he tells the tale of his youth and the one where he passes on to his boy the spirit and the secret of his art—Mr. Atwill is helped incalculably by the encircling group of players who, just by following his every word and mirroring his speech in their own faces, focus on him the ever-mutinous attention of the audience.

The capacity for listening with virtuosity is one of Mrs. Fiske's secrets and it is one for which she has been cheered so often and so loudly that it is perhaps natural that she should now be settling back comfortably in a comedy which, for the most part, asks that she do nothing in particular and do it very well—a comedy rich in its opportunities for her to listen, which she does with an extraordinarily exhilarating effect upon the play. There is no one on our stage who can hold her tongue so brilliantly. And, after all, listening is at least half of the secret of good acting. Or, for that matter, of good manners.

IN THE MAIL BAG

"Wake Up, Jonathan"?

To the Dramatic Editor:

I went recently to a first night, and the following morning read THE TIMES account of the play. As I watched that little play (I omit to name it, for fear of a suspicion of press-agentry) I cried and laughed and enjoyed every moment of it. I considered the actors and actresses, each and all, most wonderfully gifted, and the playwright (I forget who he was) a genius.

The morning after, I read the article in THE TIMES describing that first-night performance! Your man thought the star was pretty good, but gave disdainful kicks to this one and that one, and disposed of the author pretty definitely by pointing out the sources whence his plot, dialogue, &c., were stolen or borrowed.

Now, I realize that I arrived at this play in a mood directly opposed to that in which the experienced critic came. But, though I looked with the fresh, innocent eyes of a yokel, I know many things about plays and acting and literary practices that yokels do not know. Your critic, however, writes as one who knows too much. He writes as one who has seen all the actors and read all the plays, and his tone is the tone of a heavy-eyed, heavy-hearted person, without illusions or hope or faith.

Of course I realize that you cannot employ a country boy, with his fresh outlook on things, to write your theatrical criticisms. But would it not be a good, helpful idea for your critics, and all other dramatic writers, to try to see things with fresh eyes, to drop this overcaution of theirs, to remember that all writers are borrowers, that every actor has his good points as well as his weak ones, that verbal slights must hurt and discourage aspiring workers (when unaccompanied by the counter-balance of praise), and that no human being is good enough or wise enough to administer untempered justice?

W. L.

New York, Jan. 18, 1921.

It's a Wise Playwright—

To the Dramatic Editor:

I would call your attention to St. John Ervine's letter in last Sunday's TIMES. It raises the question just how far an author can criticise his own work—surely, not after he has been paid an advance royalty and the management is making his play a success, and more especially in the case when the management is a co-operative group of actors who have stood by him in his other plays, his later plays—his better plays, he calls them. "Mixed Marriage" is in many people's opinion St. John Ervine's best play. It is the opinion of many of the critics.

If "Mixed Marriage" is a play of Ervine's callow days, we hope they are not yet passed and that he will turn out a fine work in his old age. I have known St. John Ervine many years, long before he became famous, and I hope he will never grow old or scorn the base degrees by which he did ascend. I hope, also, he will never allow his position as a member of the Advisory Board to the Theatre Guild to make him forget his days of association with such men of genius as Yeats and Synge. He is not convincing when he tells us that London is not as fine a city as New York.

"Mixed Marriage" is just as great a play as "John Ferguson," even though the former was written during his callow days.

WHITFORD KANE.

New York, Jan. 20, 1921.

The Playgoer's Dream.

To the Dramatic Editor:

May I be permitted to suggest a production for that famous theatre of yours—you know, the one in which no one coughs, and, I might add, nor comes late? I need not consult you, its managing director, to assume that this theatre at least is free from such charges of commercialism as Mr. Heywood Broun leveled at the New York stage in general in commenting some time ago on the fact that Charles Gilpin was found running an elevator for want of something better to do at the time that the Provincetown Players sought him. Therefore I plainly present my plan: Why not "Othello," with Gilpin in the title rôle and John Barrymore as Iago? I leave to you the task of finding a suitable Desdemona.

With best wishes for the success of your theatre and a request to be remembered with a pair of tickets for its opening night, I am,

RALPH FREDERICK COLIN.

New York, Dec. 30, 1920.

Mr. Holt on "Mary Rose."

To the Dramatic Editor:

I heartily agreed with you in your view of "Mary Rose." Two things that especially pleased me about the play were the fine vanishing scene in the Hebrides, which had to me much of the poetic quality of "The Ert King"; also that poignant episode where Mary Rose, who could not age, came back, to find her friends all grown old. This seemed to me a fine variant on the idea of the Tithonus legend, where, though he had eternal life, not having eternal youth, he is now become nothing but the little creaking voice of the cricket, and Barrie's version seemed to me the more splendid of the two. The "perturbed spirit" of the last scene seemed to me more pathetic and moving even than that other spirit in "Hamlet."

ROLAND HOLT.

Attention of Mrs. Fiske.

To the Dramatic Editor:

Would it be a breach of anything in particular if we, as faithfuls of Mrs. Fiske and lovers of the best, began a boom for a revival of Becky Sharp?

Everywhere I go, in various parts of the country, this seems to be the consensus of the public wish. Such classic portrayals are rare, and I have more than once heard it said that the stage owes to this generation of students of literature and the drama the opportunity of seeing the genius of Thackeray and Mrs. Fiske allied in this unforgettable masterpiece.

Do you think a petition would have any weight with Sam H. Harris?

AN APPRECIATOR.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 20, 1921.

The Overcrowded Bat.

To the Dramatic Editor:

I believe that something should be done about the custom of crowding patrons into overflowing theatre boxes. My wife and I attended an established musical comedy success last evening and paid $2.75 each for seats in an upper box. When we got there eight persons were already in the box, and we made ten. It was just impossible for us to see the performance without standing up. The box, I would say, could reasonably accommodate six persons.

In going to the theatre it is certainly right to be furnished a seat giving a full view of the stage, and especially at the big prices that are being charged. I thank you for any help you can lend in adjusting what seems to me an imposition on an innocent public.

PORTER WARNER.

News and Gossip of the Rialto

OTIS SKINNER, it turns out, will play Ibáñez's gladiator when the dramatized "Blood and Sand" reaches the stage. This fact was revealed a few days ago by a chance interview with Mr. Skinner in Detroit, where he was appearing in "At the Villa Rose." "Blood and Sand," it will be remembered, was originally announced for Lionel Barrymore. Edward Sheldon was supposed to have been dramatizing the story, and John D. Williams was to have made the production.

But those plans are all changed. Not Mr. Sheldon, but one Tom Cushing, has written the play, and the Charles Frohman company, instead of Mr. Williams, will be the producer. So, too, Mr. Barrymore has dropped out of the scheme of things, leaving the way open for Mr. Skinner to play a Spaniard. Presumably Mr. Skinner will continue on tour in "At the Villa Rose" this season, and be seen here some time next year in the Ibáñez play.

February will be only a moderately active month in the local theatre. The overshadowing event, of course, will be the appearance of Lionel Barrymore in "Macbeth," scheduled for the Apollo Theatre on Feb. 17; the new Shubert theatre, the Ambassador, will open with "The Rose Girl" a week from tomorrow night; Mr. Klaw's new playhouse in Forty-fifth Street will open with Rachel Crothers's "Nice People" on the 21st; Miss Taylor and Miss Keane in their respective revivals of "Peg" and "Romance"; "Love Birds," the Pat Rooney entertainment, is said to be heading this way; Lew Fields in "Blue Eyes" is also coming along; the cast of "Cognac" is being built up, which means that that piece will soon be presented here, and Mr. Drinkwater's "Mary, Queen of Scots" is in preparation, although it can hardly be made ready for February production here.

Owen Davis's "The Haunted House" has been produced in the remote regions of Pennsylvania, and to date little news of it has reached town. From a random review, however, the play appears to be of the "Thirteenth Chair"-"Bat" school. It begins when a honeymooning couple take possession of a haunted house, and proceeds, via mysterious rappings and strange goings-on, through four hair-raising acts to an explanation.

John Drinkwater has come over for the production of his "Mary, Queen of Scots," which continues to be considerably talked about by practically every one but its producer. The new Drinkwater play, unlike "Abraham Lincoln," is not of a chronological nature, but is concerned with Mary Stuart at a single point of her career. This is when she was about 24, still the wife of Darnley—the time when the murder of Riccio took place. "In technique"—thus a guarded announcement—"the play is said to show a radical departure from custom."

The annual overseas trips of our producers are beginning early this year with the departure of Arch Selwyn for foreign parts. The new booking alliance of the Selwyns, Arthur Hopkins and Sam H. Harris makes Mr. Selwyn's trip of considerable potential importance, since he travels as the representative of all three of those firms. Although it has been understood to be an alliance for booking purposes only, it is possible that some joint productions will emerge as a result, and these are quite likely to be importations. For his own firm Mr. Selwyn has an eye on Henri Bataille's "The Red Rose" and Sacha Guitry's "The Comedian"; he will go into Germany to view a musical comedy which Mr. Harris and Irving Berlin are thinking of acquiring. He will also penetrate Italy to witness a film entitled "The World Upside Down," and will arrange for its American showing if it is all that its sponsors claim for it.

Georgette Cohan ran the Palace stage for her mother last Monday, and was dismayed when her order to "raise the front cloth" went momentarily unheeded. But Bill Clark, the veteran stage manager of the Palace, then recalled that "front cloth" was British for "drop curtain," and that Wilkie Bard had once called for "illuminations" when all that he wanted was lights.

The "Peg o' My Heart" revival, with Laurette Taylor once more as Peg, opened in Baltimore last Monday night, and will presumably come to New York in about a month. The theatrical sharpshooters have it that Miss Taylor will be seen at either the Liberty or the George M. Cohan, although both Mitzi and "The Tavern" are at present too prosperous to be ejected.

The changing mode in plays is further indicated by the news that a dramatization of Sinclair Lewis's "Main Street" is to be produced by the Shuberts. Not so many months ago it would have been insisted by all managers that "there isn't a play in it," but the success of "The First Year" has done a good deal to wean producers away from this viewpoint. Harvey O'Higgins and Harriet Ford, the inveterate collaborators, are making the dramatization of "Main Street."

Frank Van Hoven, who comes back to the Palace tomorrow, after five years spent overseas, is a magician of so-called "nut" proclivities, there being no other word to describe this kind of entertainer quite so aptly as this vaudeville colloquialism. Van Hoven was a great favorite with the late Willie Hammerstein in the old days of the Victoria Music Hall. Hammerstein had a weakness for "nut" acts. Van Hoven, Bert Fitzgibbon, Harry Breen and Jarrow, all more or less diverting-mad, could always command engagements. Van Hoven went abroad to stay a month, although Hammerstein begged him not to go. "They'll never get your fast stuff over there," cautioned Hammerstein, but Van Hoven went. His success, particularly in London, has been sensational. He has frequently played three halls in a night.

Fashions are continually changing, even in vaudeville, and now the patient trained animals who figure as Whosis's or Thingumabob's "pets" have to go in for comedy. An animal act without laughs is no longer acceptable, and the old-fashioned display of intelligence without humor is demoded. Trainers are forced to revise their offerings and monkeys, dogs, cats, seals, lions, leopards, are having a sense of humor drilled into them. Carl Emmy was perhaps the first to realise that animal acts must make audiences laugh. He collected a jovial set of dogs who are familiarly known in vaudeville as the mad wags.

The reappearance of George Arliss and Herbert Waring in the same company furnishes rather an interesting postscript to their earlier association. Years ago, when Mrs. Pat Campbell made her first visit to America, Herbert Waring was her leading man. And also in her company, playing exceedingly minor comedy rôles, was George Arliss.

THE WEEK'S NEW PLAYS

OF divers natures will be the new entertainments of the week. There will be a distinguished comedienne in a new comedy (albeit for matinees only), a Western melodrama, a roof revue and an assortment of special matinees.

The fact that a series of performances are being given tonight in aid of the China Famine Fund makes possible the Sunday première of Harold Chapin's "The New Morality," with Grace George as its star. The playwright, it may be remembered, was also the author of "The Marriage of Columbine" and "Art and Opportunity." He was killed in France early in the war.

Miss George's associates in the presentation of "The New Morality" will be Lawrence Grossmith, Ernest Lawford, Warburton Gamble, Lillian Kemble Cooper, Kathleen Andruss and John Gray. After tonight, performances will be given at the Playhouse on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons.

NEAR SANTA BARBARA—Tomorrow night at the Greenwich Village Theatre.

This is a melodrama by Willard Mack, who has not been represented in these parts for about a season. Its scenes, as the title indicates, are laid in California, and something of its content is further revealed by the fact that the piece has at various times been played as "Poker Ranch" and "Her Man."

None other than the author himself will act the leading rôle, and the leading feminine part will be taken by Clara Joel. The company will also include Charles Abbe, Joseph Sweeney, T. Tamamoto, Howard Truesdale, Luis Albarni and Royal Stout.

EVIND OF THE HILLS — Tuesday afternoon at the Greenwich Village Theatre.

This is the play which has been impending at the Greenwich for several months, and it is not to reach that playhouse via the special matinee. The first of these will be on Tuesday. The play is an "Icelandic drama," the work of Sigur Johnnson. The cast will include Margaret Wycherley, Arthur Hohl, E. G. Robinson, Byron Beasley and Beatrice Moreland.

MIDNIGHT ROUNDERS OF 1921—Saturday night at the Century Promenade.

The time has come for a new midnight revue on the Century roof, and it will accordingly be made with all of the usual pomp and ceremony Saturday night. There will be some twenty numbers, for which Jean Schwartz and Alfred Bryan are chiefly responsible, and all of the usual roof attractions. The entertainers will include Ada Forman, Tot Qualters, Olga Cook, Ethel Davis, Bessie Clifford, Jessica Brown, Dooley and Sales, Ted Lorraine, Gladys Walton, Guiran and Marguerite, Cleveland Bronner, Ingrid Solfeng, John Lowe and others.

Two O'Neill plays, instead of one, will be on view uptown until further notice. A home has finally been found for "The Emperor Jones," which took possession of the Princess Theatre last night and will be the regular tenant of that house until further notice. Tomorrow afternoon, also, Mr. O'Neill's "Diff'rent" will be brought uptown from the haunt of the Provincetowners. It will be presented at the Selwyn Theatre by the same company which acted it downtown on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons.

Under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell Armfield, who have made several interesting productions in the West, "A Winter's Tale" will be presented at the Little Theatre on Friday afternoon and Saturday morning of the coming week, with other performances to follow. The company will include John Burr, Grace Celeste, Dorothy Johnston, Henry Stillman and Marjorie Vonnegut.

The playgoer will have a chance to see any one of more than a dozen plays today and at the same time to contribute to the China Famine Fund. In aid of this charity Margaret Anglin will give a performance of "The Woman of Bronze" at the Frazee this afternoon, and there will be performances of the following plays tonight: Grant Mitchell in "The Champion" at the Longacre, "The Broken Wing" at the Forty-eighth Street, "Little Old New York" at the Plymouth, "Mary" at the Knickerbocker, "The Meanest Man in the World" at the Hudson, "Miss Lulu Bett" at the Belmont, "The Tavern" at the Cohan, "Welcome Stranger" at the Cohan & Harris, Ben-Ami in "Samson and Delilah" at the Thirty-ninth Street, Mrs. Fiske in "Wake Up, Jonathan," at Henry Miller's, "The Skin Game" at the Bijou, and Grace George in "The New Morality" (première) at the Playhouse.

Like "The Emperor Jones," Mr. Ervine's "Mixed Marriage" has found a home for nightly performances after a matinee existence. It will be seen tomorrow night and thereafter at the Sixty-third Street Theatre, a little-heralded playhouse just around the corner from the Century. It is a theatre which promises to figure more in the scheme of things from now on, for John Cort has had it remodeled and enlarged and promises to keep it supplied with plays.

At the Hippodrome tonight there will be a goodly program in aid of the Neighborhood Circle, which provides for the poor of the east side. The entertainers will include Marilynn Miller, Leon Errol, Julia Sanderson, Grace La Rue, Doyle and Dixon, the Hanneford family, Belle Story, Ferry Corwey, Duncan Sisters, Mosconi Brothers and numerous others.

Dorothy Jardon will be prominently present at the Palace during the coming week, as will Van Hoven from London, Trixie Friganza, Miss Juliet and Sarah Padden in a one-act play.

With their first two programs of the season both established in uptown theatres, the Provincetown Players will launch their third production in Macdougal Street tomorrow night. This will be a full-length play entitled "The Spring," by George Cram Cook—a play "dealing with psychic phenomena."

SCREEN PEOPLE AND PLAYS

CAPITOL—"Godless Men," adapted from "Black Pawl," a story by Ben Ames Williams, directed by Reginald Barker, a Goldwyn picture; "Babyhood," a Kineto Review.

STRAND—"The First Born," with Sessue Hayakawa, adapted from a play of the same name by Francis Powers, directed by Colin Campbell, a Robertson-Cole picture.

RIALTO—"The Kentuckians," with Monte Blue, directed by Charles Maigne, from the novel of the same name by John Fox Jr., a Paramount picture; "Wild Men of Africa," the third instalment of the Vandenbergh-Paramount African pictures.

RIVOLI—Cecil B. De Mille's "Forbidden Fruit" and Julian Ollendorff's "Roving Greenwich Village," opened Jan. 23.

CARNEGIE HALL—"Spanish Cities," a Burton Holmes Photo-Story of Travel, tonight and tomorrow afternoon.

CRITERION—"The Inside of the Cup" and "My Barefoot Boy," opened Jan. 9.

FORTY-FOURTH STREET—D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East," opened Sept. 3.

BROADHURST—"Over the Hill," opened Sept. 17.

APOLLO—"Behold the Man," fourth Sunday afternoon and evening.

LOEW'S NEW YORK—Today and tomorrow, "The Love Light," with Mary Pickford. Tuesday, "The Sage Hen," with Gladys Brockwell. Wednesday, "Silk Hosiery," with Enid Bennett; daily change of program.

PLAZA—Today through Thursday, "Passion," with Pola Negri. Friday and Saturday, "The Life of the Party," with Roscoe Arbuckle.

BROOKLYN STRAND—"Mamma's Affair," with Constance Talmadge.

STEREOSCOPIC motion pictures, it seems, have long been the object of practical effort on the part of a number of workers, as well as of vague dreaming, for the claims recently put forward in Chicago for the Spoor-Berggren camera have attracted into the open reports of other and different machines for making pictures with three dimensions. Examining these reports, The Motion Picture News was led to Charles V. Henkel, in New York, who is said to have been an important worker in motion picture production for some time. Mr. Henkel apparently was reluctant to talk about his invention, preferring, he said, to wait until his patent rights were adequately protected, but he did assert positively that he had perfected a single lens stereoscopic camera, and had demonstrated its efficiency to members of his family and a few intimate friends. He thought that the double lens Spoor-Berggren camera could do what was claimed for it, but considered his machine superior because it did not "require special film or photography to produce the stereoscopic effect."

The only explanation of his process, which he calls the "Spectra," that Mr. Henkel would give was that it involved the emphasis of "color values," which, of course, are to be distinguished from actual colors. "Color value exists in all positive motion picture prints, to a certain extent not visible to the eye as now projected," said Mr. Henkel to the News's reporter. These color values, it is claimed, are made visible with the Spectra process, and are a factor in giving the impression of depth to a picture on the screen. In this connection Mr. Henkel declared that it was not true that a man sees things in nature in three dimensions because his two eyes, focused on objects from different angles, give depth to perception. He pointed out that a one-eyed man sees things in three dimensions as well as a man with two eyes. He argued from this that a single lens could register depth, and that "solidity" existed in every picture, but could not be perceived unless emphasized by his process, or another.

Having finally settled the ownership of "The Kid," and started it on its way to distribution, Charlie Chaplin intends to get to work at once and make the four short comedies required to complete his contract with First National, it is announced. He expects to deliver the first of the four within a few weeks, according to the report.

And in this connection it is stated that Chaplin, who writes and directs his own works, does not want scenarios from the outside. During the last month he has received 1,464 manuscripts, from a fisherman in Oregon, a school teacher in Alabama, an inmate of Sing Sing and divers other people, all of which have been rejected, as all others will be.

Another foreign picture, presumably from Germany, directed by Ernst Lubitsch and starring Pola Negri, the director and star of "Passion," will be released by First National in May. It is called, probably for American consumption only, "Gypsy Blood," and is an adaptation of "Carmen." "Passion" will be released generally on Feb. 17.

The first of the ambitious pictures to be undertaken this year by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is the adaptation of George V. Hobart's morality play, "Experience," with George Fitzmaurice as director and Richard Barthelmess in the rôle of Youth.

John Emerson and Anita Loos, with their director, Victor Fleming, have amassed some 13,000 feet of film for their new production, "Wife Insurance," and are now busy cutting and assembling the 5,000 or so feet needed for a photoplay of normal length.

William L. and Irene Finley, who made the altogether delightful "Chuming With Chipmunks" for the Associated Audubon Societies, have made another promising reel, entitled "No Reg'lar Bird." It tells about hummingbirds at home and abroad, and is included in one of the Bray Pictographs.

Harold Goodwin, who has appeared in numerous pictures and is just 18 years old, has been dubbed a star by William Fox.

Vitagraph's picturization of "Black Beauty," adapted to the screen by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester, has been completed and received its tryout at Hartford, Conn., recently.

Nazimova's next adventure will be in a screen version of "Camille," for which June Mathis has prepared the continuity.

Adolph Zukor has purchased William A. Brady's picturization of his own melodrama, "Life," and, presumably, will release it via Paramount.

BROUGHT INTO FOCUS

WHO has been trying to jazz up Constance Binney's acting? Her last picture, "Something Different," which was at the Rialto recently, rattles largely because Miss Binney acts as if some one had kept saying to her: "Now let's have plenty of pep," and she obediantly had tried to be cute and kittenish. R. William Neill, who directed the production, is suspected, for not long ago he directed Constance Talmadge in two pictures, "Good References" and "Dangerous Business," and it looks as if his impressions of Miss Talmadge's style had influenced him in directing Miss Binney.

Now, Miss Talmadge's way is her own, and as such has its charm. Miss Binney's way is her own and, with her, has its charm. But Constance Binney's way assumed by Constance Talmadge would undoubtedly lose most of its charm, and Miss Talmadge's assumed by Miss Binney certainly has. All Constances cannot act alike.

If Mr. Neill really is responsible for the apparent attempt to Talmadgize Miss Binney, and he, or any other director, tries to do it again, it's simply up to Miss Binney to rebel and insist on being herself. No one, except, possibly, a misguided director, would want her to be anything else. Let the heroine of "Erstwhile Susan" and "39 East" be a real studio heroine and notify any director who has somebody else in mind that she, and not somebody else, is on the stage before him. The odds are that Miss Talmadge, under similar circumstances, would be effectively insubordinate.

If Miss Binney was just making a little experiment of her own in "Something Different," it is to be hoped that she realizes its complete failure and will be guided next time by her work in earlier pictures. This does not mean that she has to be always the same. If she has versatility no one will want her to put limits upon it. If she can develop her talent it's her duty to do so. But she must follow her own paths in going ahead and branching out. Her hop-skip-and-jumpy performance in "Something Different" is not a sign of progress but of plagiarism.

IF you go to see a photoplay the second time and enjoy it, it's a good picture—for you, anyhow. This is the most severe test to which any one can subject screen work, unless he is relentless and goes to see the picture for the third time. Most photoplays, even those which please at a first showing, will not stand a second visit. They are almost invariably disappointing. The good things in them do not seem quite so good as they did at first, and the faults seem multiplied and magnified. The writer has seen few pictures that did not bore or annoy him at a second showing.

But he has seen "Passion" three times, and still likes it immensely. Each showing contributed fresh pleasure. The acting seemed better the third time than the first. Being familiar with the continuity and settings, he could watch the players more intently, and a careful examination revealed few false movements or expressions. Yes, the picture has anachronisms, some of its sets are not particularly impressive, and there may be legitimate criticism of its crowd movements. But these seem minor shortcomings. The story is told easily, its parts are well composed, it is colored just enough with romance and humor, its continuity is logical. And the acting of Pola Negri and the others in the cast is as good as anything the writer has witnessed on the screen.

The only serious fault with the picture is its length. It fills nine reels, of 1,000 feet, or fifteen minutes, each. One reel could be eliminated to the advantage of the other eight. The death of Armand de Foix, for example, is needlessly, even painfully, protracted, and some feet of film might be taken out of the scenes in which the King dies. The subtitles, by Katherine Hilliker, are excellent, but some of them are useless, and therefore have no reason for existence. "Passion," in eight reels, shown with a short intermission somewhere near the end of the fourth, would fill a rare photodramatic evening.

This story of Mme. Du Barry was picturized in Germany, under the direction of the apparently Teutonic Ernst Lubitsch, but the writer makes the guess that an examination of Mr. Lubitsch's antecedents would lead to Paris, for the photoplay seems French in treatment as well as subject. Of course the life of one of Louis XV.'s mistresses is nothing with which to entertain young children, and some may find it objectionable, however treated, but as presented on the screen it is vulgar only to the vulgar. It could easily have been made offensive to every refined person, however, and a heavy-handed German director, of the kind that seems indigenous to Germany, would have had a hard time making it anything else. It may be that a director whose horizon does not extend beyond the German boundary could have the restraint, the lightness of touch, the good taste, revealed in "Passion"—maybe—but has Mr. Lubitsch ever worked in Paris, or under French influence?

The following apology, or explanation, came last week from the Rialto-Rivoli offices:

The pictures of East Africa and Uganda, taken by the Vandenbergh-Paramount expedition and shown for the last two weeks at the Rivoli Theatre, were crowded out this week, due to the length of Cecil B. De Mille's "Forbidden Fruit." At the Rialto, where Roscoe Arbuckle is the principal screen attraction, no room could be found on the program for the African pictures either.

"Crowded out!" And by "Forbidden Fruit!" "No room could be found" on a program filled with five or six reels of a comedy that should have occupied no more than two!

Of course, the Vandenbergh pictures should have been shown all at once, as the big feature of a program. To split them up into four parts and use them as fillers was to weaken their appeal and annoy those interested enough to go to see them, despite their piecemeal offering. And what incongruity resulted when the first instalment of these sternly realistic pictures was put on a program with "Polly With a Past," and the second with "Paying the Piper"! African savages and Ina Claire! Naked black warriors and Dorothy Dickson! A program divided against itself cannot stand, and two programs at the Rivoli have fallen, where three might have stood alone—"Polly With a Past," "Paying the Piper" and "Wild Men of Africa," each with a week to itself.

The third and fourth instalments of Dr. Vandenbergh's pictures will come along as soon as room can be found for them, it is announced. Well, that is better than not having them at all.

MUSIC OPERAS AND DRAMATIC GIFT

By RICHARD ALDRICH.

AN experience of a dozen years by the Metropolitan Opera Company in the production of American operas by native composers has not succeeded so far in bringing to light an opera that has shown capacity for continued existence. The American operas have been produced, usually with no little care and at no little expense, have lived through the season in the four or five performances that the manager arranged for them in the subscription, and then have disappeared. Charles Wakefield Cadman's little opera "Shanewis," first heard in the season of 1917-18, was heard again in the following season, but has since stolen off to the repository where American operas are laid away. Henry Hadley's "Cleopatra's Night," produced last season, is now again in the current repertory.

When Mr. Hadley's opera was first heard a year ago it seemed in certain ways the most successful of the ten or a dozen American compositions that have been given at the Metropolitan, if not musically the "best" and most original. It has its obvious faults and deficiencies, both in music and libretto, but the composer seems to have succeeded better than his predecessors in making an opera that is "practicable" for the stage. And to its practicability, no doubt, is due in large measure at least—the causes and motives working in the inside of a manager's office being necessarily inscrutable and not for public discussion—its retention in the repertory.

Mr. Hadley's practical knowledge of music is wide and extends to the field of the lyric drama. He entered on the task of operatic composition in "Cleopatra's Night" with some understanding of what the task required, with a knowledge of dramatic effect and of some of the requirements of operatic technique. The libretto is a pretty poor specimen of English literature and a sad perversion for stage effect of the gorgeous prose tale of Théophile Gautier, but is in some respects well adapted for dramatic purposes. And there have been many librettos of successful operas that are very poor specimens of literature in English, and even in Italian, French and German; also many that are sad perversions of the originals from which they were derived.

It has too often seemed as if native American composers, naturally ambitious to produce operas, have started ajar upon the undertaking with musical ideas and excellent training in various branches of the technique of composition, but with little clear understanding of the exigencies of the operatic stage or firm hold on methods of meeting them, or else with preconceived ideas as to what an opera should be, not corresponding with the actual realities.

It has been said that there is a vicious circle here. American operas cannot succeed because their composers have not the dramatic gift or an experience and knowledge that may in some fashion take the place of it. They have not dramatic experience and knowledge because their operas, with the rarest exceptions, are not produced. How shall this circle be broken? There is probably no way except the courageous and expensive one the management of the Metropolitan has chosen—that of actually producing American operas as they are and giving their composers the opportunity to see where these operas can be bettered.

But it is not only the youthful Americans who have rushed into this difficult métier without due preparation. Some of the greatest of the Europeans have been as rash, and have dashed into operatic composition with neither gift nor knowledge to guide them aright. Schumann, who was his own librettist, exhibited in his one opera, "Genovena," a lack of the dramatic sense needed to endow it with life. The opera contains beautiful music from the overture to the last finale, but there is a minimum of dramatic characterization and it has not the breath of operatic life.

Schumann himself did not know it; composers often do not know. He was deeply convinced that every note of "Genovena" was dramatic music and declared that he would throw the opera into the fire if he believed that the contemporary criticisms of it as "undramatic" were well founded. But the history of the opera, of the various vain attempts made from time to time, from pious consideration for the master, to keep it on the German operatic stage, sufficiently establishes its dramatic inefficiency. No doubt some of the blame must be shared by the text; it is a difficult matter to lay down in principle how much of the blame for operatic failure should be attributed to the libretto and how much to the music. Both are to blame and it is clear that the music is undramatic.

Mendelssohn thought he wanted to write an opera, and he spent much of his short life looking for a subject and a libretto, but never really found what he wanted—his early juvenile attempts at opera need not be taken into account. He got a little way with a "Loreley" opera, but was said not to be really satisfied with it. He wanted a libretto on a high level of morality, such as Da Ponte provided for Mozart—and before we smile at this it would be well to remember that Beethoven was haunted by the same desire and spent his life searching for a companion text to the chaste "Fidelio."

But it can hardly be supposed that Mendelssohn could ever have produced an opera of really operatic stature. Very likely he would never have found what he wanted had he lived to the Psalmist's age limit for men instead of dying at 38; or, if he had, it would not have met the practical demands of the operatic stage.

His genius was not operatic. There is a certain kind of dramatic power in "Elijah;" so strong is the ruggestion of it that "Elijah" has been put upon the stage and acted. But it is not the kind that the stage demands and the experiment has remained only an experiment.

Brahms was another of the same sort. There are on record observations of his, suggesting that he would have liked to compose an opera. But in general he seemed to class operatic composition and marriage together as two things that were not for him, though he may have thought of both with more or less longing. It does not seem, even to the most ardent admirers of his music, that he could have written a "viable" opera. His bent was in directions entirely different, that led him far away either from the operatic conventions of an earlier day or from those of the "music drama."

Mr. Fuller-Maitland suggests that Brahms's "Rinaldo" represents the sort of style which Brahms would have adopted if he had found an operatic libretto to suit him. "And if that is so," he says very justly, "we may be very glad that that libretto was never found, for even if we dismiss from our minds all comparisons with Wagner and modern dramatic music, the existing specimen has so many points of weakness in musical stagecraft that it is only too probable that an opera by Brahms would have shared the fate of Schumann's 'Genovena,' and after a few repetitions of a succès d'estime would have been forgotten by every one except some very young and very fervent admirers."

As for Liszt, he never composed an opera deliberately intended to be an opera, curiously, as it may appear to many, for the general character of his genius would seem favorable to dramatic expression, to the creation of operatic effect. The "Legend of St. Elizabeth" was produced as an opera at the Metropolitan Opera House three years ago and amply demonstarted then that whatever it might be called, it could not be called an opera, and was not one.

These composers were all great in other ways, and it is no reflection on the powers and rank as musicians of the very distinguished company here assembled that they had not the operatic gift.

It may even be said that Beethoven did not possess the true flair for operatic effect. With all the profound and moving dramatic significance of the essential scenes in "Fidelio," with all the exalted beauty of the music, there is that in the opera which has kept it from vigorous and continued life on the stage. With all the power of the great scenes and the intense sincerity, beauty and imagination of the music in them, there are other scenes that, so to speak, miss fire. The finale of the opera turns toward the oratorio style and betrays a certain conventionality. Moreover, Beethoven's uncertainty of touch as a dramatic musician is suggested by the enormous labor and pains he spent in revising it twice to meet what were considered to be the practical demands of actual performance.

Its restoration to the stage nowadays is always an effort of disinterestedness on some manager's part and is never lasting. It cannot be because the music is "too good" for the public. The public, even the operatic public, is not averse to "good music" in an opera when it develops in the operatic manner.

On the other hand, there have been musicians of much inferior fibre possessing this operatic gift who have wrought with it in ways that have brought them within sight of immortality. There was Michael William Balfe, not to be named as a musician in the same breath with any of those mentioned above. Yet he produced in "The Bohemian Girl" an opera that has demonstrated a vitality sufficient to carry it on to well-nigh eighty years of life in English, Italian, French and German.

There was the Baron Friedrich von Flotow, whose "Martha" has likewise won for itself a place all over the world and whose "Stradella" has partaken of much, though not all, of "Martha's" success. Flotow also was not much of a musician; some critics have called him, in the technique of composition, an amateur. But they cannot deprive him of the fame of "Martha" and "Stradella," aged 74 and 84 years, respectively.

And something to the same effect may be said of Bellini and Donizetti, most famous of the vast tribe of Italian operatic purveyors of the nineteenth century. Their talent for opera of their kind was authentically established by the life and vigor that their operas showed for so long a time, and though they are all now faded, some still live the life of the footlights. But the musical abilities of these two in any other direction whatever was absolutely nil, and their technique, even in the genre they successfully cultivated, was of an elementary sort. But they and their fellows had the natural instinct for the stage which cannot be learned apparently, nor bought for a price.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

John Gay's "The Beggar's Opera," from the original version of 1728, is issued by Boosey & Co. in the form of a voice and piano score, "as performed at the Lyric Theatre, Hammersmith." This revival in a suburban district at the West of London on June 5, 1920, has not only been heard there continuously for seven months since, but also transplanted, as in 1750, to New York. Fifty-two musical numbers are included. English dances and airs of popular ballads once adapted by Dr. Pepusch, and now revised and augmented by Frederick Austin. The songs, as remarked in a note to the score, may be used in concert, though not more than two in any one program, while all rights of dramatic performance are reserved by Nigel Playfair.

MUSIC A NOVELTY BY MARINUZZI

Continued

GALLI-CURCI'S return in "Lucia" and "Sonnambula," the début of a tenor, Charles Marshall, in "Otello," and the production of Gino Marinuzzi's opera, "Jacquerie," are now among the seven bills of the Chicago Opera Association's second week at the Manhattan.

Marinuzzi's work, which opened the Chicago season last November, had previously been heard at Rome and Buenos Aires. Its story is of an uprising of French peasants in the fourteenth century.

At the Western première on Nov. 17, Karleton Hackett wrote in The Chicago Evening Post that "'Jacquerie' will set Marinuzzi high in the estimation of those who study the art of music seriously. It is a symphonic score spread over a broad canvas." For those others who go to opera to enjoy its lighter graces, Mr. Hackett found this work "a severe test." The phrase recalls some historic objections to novelties before now, and on Broadway as well as on Michigan Avenue.

The Story of "Jacquerie."

The Chicago Tribune spoke of "Jacquerie" in its non-musical aspects as "a story which, because of its vicious portent, was forced to limp dramatically in its explanatory first act, but made up for lost time in the quick, sweeping action of its second and third periods." The entire opera, the writer added, not counting intermissions, occupied not over an hour and a half, as short and to the point as Puccini. This unusual merit of brevity and the "magnificent musical showmanship" of the composer-conductor, concluded The Tribune, "disguised and made more bearable the dramatic portrayal of a theme based in part on a hideous medieval practice."

"Jacquerie," at any rate, is not alone as an example of common belief that a custom like that referred to did exist. The Metropolitan has had in d'Albert's "Tiefland," from Spanish "Marta of the Lowlands," such an example. In the Manhattan's production, a peculiarly brutal instance brings on a peasants' revolt, stirring all the countryside against the landholding interests, and in this mass movement recalling also Blasco-Ibañez's "The Cabin" or Balzac's "Sons of the Soil." "Jacquerie" is from a story by Eugene Sue. It is in three acts, and its climax was said in Chicago to be effective, the revolt "bringing with it the downfall of the lord, the burning of his castle and the triumph of the peasants, as a new era is born."

The libretto was made for Marinuzzi by A. Donaudy from Sue's story. As to its underlying motive, The Chicago Journal also said it dealt "with an incident known euphemistically in the law dictionaries as the jus primae noctis, or otherwise as the droit de seigneur. For further details, the aforesaid dictionaries rather than the columns of a newspaper should be consulted. Certain authorities, it is true, the Encyclopaedia Britannica among others, claim that the strange custom of seignoral right with regard to peasant brides never was recognized in medieval law; that certain cited cases are isolated examples."

Maine Tenor in "Otello."

Charles Marshall is from Maine and was the surprise of the Western series; he is said to have sung in Italy, Russia, Greece and Turkey. Besides Otello, his chief rôles include Canio, Radames and William Tell. He made his début in Italy in "Trovatore," and at Chicago, as here, in "Otello."

In tomorrow's "Lucia" with Galli-Curci are Schipa and Rimini. With Marshall on Tuesday in "Otello" will be Raisa and Titta Ruffo. On Wednesday "Manon" will be sung by the French cast, headed by Yvonne Gall and Muratore, and conducted by Polacco.

Miss Garden in "Thais" on Thursday will be assisted by Dufranne, Albert Paillard and Cotreuil. Mr. Marinuzzi will conduct his own "Jacquerie" in its New York première on Friday, with Miss Gall, Edward Johnson and Galeffi.

Next Saturday's matinee is "La Sonnambula," with Galli-Curci and Schipa, while Saturday evening brings a gala "Faust," with Garden, Muratore and Baklanoff, conducted by Marinuzzi.

IS PADEREWSKI TO PLAY?

PERHAPS it is most natural that the expected return of Paderewski to this country in mid-February should have prompted in advance the greatest interest in learning whether or not he would again appear on the concert stage. Mr. Paderewski, according to his latest cable to his stepson, W. O. Gorski, will now sail for America from Havre on La France next Sunday, Feb. 6.

New York friends of the pianist have confidently asserted that he would be heard here again. In London, where the opposite belief was held, a widely circulated "personal" paragraph said: "M. Paderewski has informed the press that, owing to neuritis in his hands, he will never touch a piano again, and that the private instrument which he has taken with him everywhere in his travels is now for sale." This report has, however, been denied by Paderewski himself.

Writing in The London Times recently, T. P. ("Tay Pay") O'Connor, M. P., took the report for true. "So Paderewski is to play no more!" he exclaimed. "This is the tragic news I find in the newspapers. I will refuse to accept it as long as I can; it would mean too great a loss to the world. I wonder how many people—outside his own countrymen—know the real Paderewski. I knew nothing about his inner personality till an accident brought him and me together. I had looked at him from afar for years, and the rapt look with which he played, the long, fair hair, the general dreaminess of the expression, even when he was not playing, and the reports I had heard of a certain melancholy that haunted him, gave me the impression of one of these artistic souls that live away from the realities of life, and especially from the joys of life."

"Tay Pay" went on to tell how, being later in America on a mission, he found himself coming in contact with Paderewski constantly when business brought them both to Washington, and he began to form "quite a different impression" of the famous Pole, when, face to face, they discussed political problems. The final occasion on which he felt he came to understand Paderewski thoroughly was when he attended a great Polish meeting in Chicago. It was to the Irish M. P. a most impressive gathering. There were 30,000 Poles present; amid impressive scenes some of them were sworn in to join the Polish Legion to fight for France and for Poland on the allied front. All the Polish priests of Chicago were on the platform to give their blessing and also their money to the cause of Poland.

"But to me," said O'Connor, "of course, the main interest of the meeting was the Chairman; and Paderewski was the Chairman. I had been told—the statement was a surprise—that he was one of the greatest orators Poland had ever produced. I heard him for an hour. I could not understand him, of course, for the speech was in Polish; but I could see the effect on the audience; and I realized that this slight, almost fragile-looking man, could sway the emotions of these people as completely and as promptly as the breezes sway the fields of growing wheat."

This was the first surprise. A greater came when later in the night "Tay Pay" accepted Paderewski's invitation to dine with him.

"For four hours on end I listened to him as he spoke on everything and a few other things. It was one of the most fascinating of my experiences. Melancholy! He was the gayest talker I had heard for years. Story followed story; all light-hearted, but with scorn for the Germans underneath, and equal scorn for the pacifists—especially in America. And he spoke in several languages—but mainly in English—and with such ease and perfection that it was hard to realize that he was not a native of each of the countries whose language he spoke.

"Then I realized that Paderewski was not merely a great pianist, but a big man. As to his goodness, the years he devoted to his country's cause in America—away from his art, away from his beautiful home, journeying hundreds of miles every week, seeing thousands of people—they are the testimonies to his patriotism. But the man was what interested me. Paderewski's personality was one of the biggest surprises of my life."

ORCHESTRA PROGRAMS.

THE "London" symphony, which so profoundly impressed two New York audiences recently, will be repeated at the Symphony Society's matinee in Aeolian Hall today, when Mr. Damrosch conducts Vaughan Williams's work, previously led by Albert Coates. There are also Mozart's concerto for two pianos, with Guy Maier and Lee Pattison, and the "Academic Festival" overture of Brahms.

For the Philharmonic players this afternoon in Carnegie Hall Mr. Stransky's program includes a prelude, chorale and fugue of Bach, the Eighth Symphony and third "Leonore" overture of Beethoven and, following an intermission, Tschaikovsky's symphony "Pathetique."

Mr. Mengelberg has postponed Arnold Schoenberg's "Verklaerte Nacht," hitherto announced for the National Symphony's concerts on Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon at Carnegie Hall. Instead, he will give Strauss's "Life of a Hero," preceded by Beethoven's "Leonore" No. 3, Monsigny's dances from "Aline" and Debussy's "Faun."

A second appearance of Detroit's Symphony Orchestra has been arranged as a benefit for the Smith College fund on Wednesday night in Carnegie Hall. Mr. Gabrilowitsch will conduct Beethoven's "Leonore" overture No. 3, Scriabine's "Poem Divine," and Saint-Saëns's G minor concerto, with Mischa Levitzki, and Wagner's "Tannhauser" overture.

The Symphony Society's concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday afternoon and Friday evening present old Italian dances by Galilei and Molinaro, overtures to Rossini's "William Tell," and Sinigaglia's "I Baruffe Chiozzotte," Respighi's "Fountains of Rome," parts of Casella's "Venetian Convent," and de Sabata's "Juventus."

A last pair but one of the Boston Symphony concerts marks the advancing season this week at Carnegie Hall, where Pierre Monteux on Thursday night conducts Beethoven's First Symphony, Debussy's "The Sea," and Franck's "Les Djinns," with solo piano part by E. Robert Schmitz. There is also Liszt's "Tasso."

Dmitry Dobkin, a Russian tenor, makes his American début at the Philharmonic matinee on Friday at Carnegie Hall, singing airs from "Tosca" and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Sadko." Henry Hadley will conduct Berlioz's "Roman Carnival," Herbert's "Woodland Fancies," Strauss's "Don Juan" and "The Swan of Tuonela," by Sibelius.

David Bispham will assist the Damrosch orchestra in Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Symphony Society's third concert for children in Aeolian Hall on Saturday morning.

The Boston Symphony's Saturday matinee in Carnegie Hall comprises Dvorak's Second Symphony in D minor, two "Passacaglias," by Cyril Scott, a "Suite Francaise" by Roger-Ducasse and Wagner's "Faust" overture.

Josef Lhevinne assists the Philharmonic on Saturday night in a Russian program, including Borodin's B minor symphony, Kalinnikow's "Fir Tree and the Palm," Tschaikovsky's concerto in A flat minor and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Spanish Caprice."

The Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, under Nicolai Sokoloff, will give its only concert here two weeks from tonight at the Hippodrome, assisted by Margaret Matzenauer in Wagner's "Liebestod" from "Tristan" and in Tschaikovsky's violin concerto by Michel Piastro.

METROPOLITAN OPERA.

"LOHENGRIN" in English revival, a new Gilda in "Rigoletto" and a special matinee of "Louise" are special events among seven operas of the Metropolitan's twelfth week. Joseph Urban has designed the new Wagner production, while that of Charpentier's Parisian spectacle, mistakenly credited to him last Monday, is by James Fox and the Triangle Studios.

Tonight's "opera concert" presents Duci de Kerekjarto in Mendelssohn's concerto and other violin pieces by Goldmark, Sarasate and Hubay. The singers are Mabel Garrison, Rose Ponselle, Orville Harrold and Giuseppe Danise.

Following "Zaza" tomorrow, with Farrar and others, Mr. Gatti's new cast for "Lohengrin" on Wednesday includes Easton, Matzenauer, Sembach, Whitehill, Leonhardt and Blass, led by Bodanzky. Farrar appears Thursday afternoon in "Louise," and Bori that evening in "L'Amore dei Tre."

Cora Chase, a new American member of the Metropolitan company, makes her début here as Gilda in "Rigoletto" on Friday night, with Hackett, De Luca, Perini and Mardones. Saturday's matinee is a double bill, including "L'Oracolo," with Bori, and "Cleopatra's Night," while Crimi is new on Saturday evening in the first popular price performance of "La Forza del Destino."

DOUBLE-OPERA DOINGS.

Former subscribers to the Chicago company's visits at the Lexington had but little difficulty in finding their way with old Manhattan operagoers to the Western stars' performances of last week at the Thirty-fourth Street house. The Manhattan comfortably held the subscription, with slight rearrangement. A double staff was combined from the two theatres built by Hammerstein, the doormen being Frank Stateiberger of the downtown and Daniel Reilly from the uptown house, while Augustus Robinson and Jack Pastor were likewise paired at the two lobby stairways, and patrons were lighted to their seats on the orchestra floor by August Herbst, long the Manhattan's chief usher, with his aids, and on the dress circle tier by others, including a Lexington veteran's son, Wilbur Matthews.

LENTEN RECITALS.

Ash Wednesday falls on Feb. 9 this year, and already the Lenten organ recitals are starting. At the City College on Wednesday next Samuel Baldwin gives the first of eight "historical" programs, beginning with "The Forerunners of Bach."

The first of Clarence Dickinson's annual lecture recitals at Union Seminary takes place Tuesday afternoon. Among those assisting are Inez Barbour, Rose Bryant, Lambert Murphy and Frank Croxton.

FREE TO THE PUBLIC.

An "Italian evening" at Cooper Union tonight engages Mario Laurenti, Carmela Ippolito and Paparello's Neapolitan Orchestra.

Samuel Baldwin at the City College today plays Bach's "My Heart Is Fixed," a sonata by Borowski and "Festival Toccata" by Fletcher.

500 Enroll for Orchestras.

A committee headed by Mrs. E. H. Harriman has organized the American Orchestral Society, which is said in two months to have enrolled ten neighborhood groups with a total of 500 musicians. The society is limiting its field as yet to New York, and a central orchestra is to be directed by Dirk Foch.

"Isba" Aids Russian Refugees.

The Russian Isba, or village folksingers and dancers, under the direction of Serge Borowsky of the Moscow Opera, will give eight performances this week at the Lexington Theatre as part of the Commonwealth Centre's nationalization campaign. Of the proceeds, 25 per cent. will go to aid Russian refugee children.

Union to Play for Chinese.

Members of the Musical Mutual Protective Union, Local 130, comprising the orchestras of New York's theatres, have received from their National Executive Committee permission to give their services gratis in many theatres today at special performances for the benefit of the famine sufferers in China.

Brooklyn Music.

Hulda Lashanska, soprano, will be heard with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the last but one of its Brooklyn concerts on Friday at the Academy.

Carl G. Schmidt gives a free organ recital at the Girls' High School in Brooklyn today.

NATIONAL PARK MONOPOLIES

Grabbing of Control of Roads and Transportation, Without Interference from Public.

By ENOS A. MILLS.

LAST Summer a well-known New Yorker was not allowed to enter the Rocky Mountain National Park. Several thousand other visitors were barred. These visitors arrived in hired automobiles; the cars were in good order, and the drivers were experienced, but the park was in the possession of a transportation company.

Yellowstone, Glacier and other leading national parks are also illegally in the possession of monopolies. It is a case of hire your car from these concerns or keep out of national parks. The monopolies and park officials have not yet excluded a car which the traveler owns. But they can cause the owner to undergo an experience that is neither rest nor recreation. On the boundary line of the Yellowstone, an armed park ranger compels him to obtain permission in writing to enter, exacts $7.50 toll, which is recommended by the transportation monopoly, but not authorized by law. Inside the park are other red-tape rules and regulations that may entangle him and cause him to be ejected, even though he complies with all road courtesies and customs.

So speedily do the monopoly cars rush their passengers through the parks and then back, to rush another load of passengers through, that it interferes with business to have other cars in the parks. Thus it comes about that the park officials prohibit cars not hired of the monopoly and compel car owners to side track, wait at given stations—at all times require them to give the right of way to monopoly cars.

The transportation monopoly also has everything else in the Yellowstone monopolized—camps, hotels, stores, guides and saddle horses. The officials bar competitive business. Yet the statutes which created these parks forbid monopolization. The whole intent in creating national parks was to prevent the exploitation of travelers. The monopolies are not controlled. They both impose upon travelers and trample on the local resident people, whose means of living is the travel trade of the parks.

Rules and regulations, sweeping laws aside, were the means used by officials in opening the parks to the monopolistic system. The courts are not open for the review of these arbitrary rules and regulations. The officials are dictators of national parks.

In the case of the Rocky Mountain National Park, however, the officials are having some trouble. This park has an attendance that equals any three others, and it contains private property worth several millions of dollars. Over this property, it is contended by opponents of the monopoly idea, the transportation combine will have wrecking power if it wins. It is even now charged that an attempt is under way to wreck the independent carriers, using physical force and censoring the news. Rangers block the public roads. There have been attacks on the drivers of independent cars and it has been possible for somebody, somehow, to prevent the issuing of warrants for the arrest of those who attacked.

Our public roads are thoroughfares of freedom. To travel a public road for business or pleasure is a common right. If public roads are not free, then private property is not safe and life and liberty are menaced. If public roads in national parks are surrendered to monopolies, why not roads anywhere? And even the streets on Manhattan Island? The bureaucratic park officials are not chosen by the public. The monopolies cannot be removed nor regulated by the public. The Director of National Parks is not responsible to the public. But Congress can remedy the evils by removing the present monopolies and by enacting a statute forbidding the installation of other monopolies. And it is of utmost importance that there be no more arbitrary rules and regulations; that all such rules and regulations be reviewed by the courts. Our national parks are a part of our country and should be under the laws of our country.

SCENARIOS FOR CHURCHES

A NEW kind of scenario writing has arisen—for use in churches. But it has already been found that suitable ones are difficult to obtain. The International Church Film Corporation, formed for the purpose of producing films specially adapted for presentation in the churches, sent out a call some time ago for manuscripts. Hundreds have submitted scenarios, from as far away as England and South America, but the result is disappointing.

The Rev. Barclay Acheson, scenario editor of the church film organization, said:

"Most people have mighty queer ideas about the kind of motion picture the Church is looking for. They think that if a scenario is 'mushy' enough, mawkishly sentimental and sufficiently false to the facts of real life, it is just the thing for the Church. Instead of the crime and vampire photoplay, the pendulum is swung to the other extreme.

"If people want to write scenarios for the Church, they will have to familiarize themselves with its aims and ideals. A depressing thing which this flood of church movie scenarios has pointed out to me is the wide ignorance, or, perhaps, misunderstanding, of the purpose of the Church and of religion. We want films that will point the lessons of the Church, that will impress its ideals. But outside of trained religious writers, there has not yet appeared any one able to write a scenario in harmony with the tone of the Church. Never before have films of this type been so sorely needed as at present, when the eyes of the public are at last open to the effects of the 'crime film.'"

Here is a typical synopsis received by the International Church Film Corporation:

"Synopsis—Cost of Honor—Her Life.

"An orphan raised in the Country and at 17 years Leaves and goes to the City to work for her self, she meets with trials—but over comes them all to save her Honor—at the Last, it is a beautiful Tableaux—when she runs away up on a cliff—the boy is behind her—she jumps falls to the pavement—dead. When a huge snake comes up to her—then a beautiful star—shines from the Heavens an Angel appears with a wand he sticks the snake and kills him. Then Three more Angels appear—and carry The body up to Heaven—when the Heaven opens and God is standing there to receive her when she becomes also an Angel, in Heaven. She gives her life to save her Honor.

"I do not know much about the Bible but hope you are pleased with my writing.

"I will take nothing less than $400.00."

SOCIETY CURRENT DOINGS

THE last week of the social season, before the drab curtains of Lent descend, will be active and brilliant, for many large functions are scheduled to take place. In fact, the gayeties will continue right up to the night of Shrove Tuesday. Then will come the spirited exodus to the Southland.

In the matter of Lent, however, the exception proves the rule. A great many people strictly observe the penitential days, but there are many who do not. This means that various activities will continue throughout the forty days, for society must be entertained. The Lenten sewing classes will soon convene, and there is sure to be a spirit of carnival break through the dullness at Mi-Carême.

Of all the many affairs of the week, the annual Charity Ball naturally takes precedence, for it is really an ancient institution. It falls due on Tuesday evening, at the Waldorf-Astoria. The New York Nursery and Child's Hospital, for whose aid it is given, dates back to 1823, the oldest of its kind in the city. It started when New York was still young, as the Marion Street Maternity Hospital, and with this was eventually combined the Nursery for the Children of Poor Women, founded through the efforts of Mrs. Cornelius Dubois.

It is related of Mrs. Dubois that she was driving through the poorer section of the city when she was startled by screams from the upper story of a tenement, and, looking up, she saw a child hanging from a window, but caught in some way that prevented it from falling. With the help of the neighbors she broke into the room, released and saved the child. Then she found that it had been left alone while its parents were at work. Further inquiries showed the need of the proper care of children in such cases. And thus the nursery was founded.

Many dinners are to precede the ball, some of them to be very large. Mrs. Frank S. Witherbee, who is Treasurer of the ball, is to entertain at dinner for her daughter, Mrs. Charles Duncan Miller, and Mrs. Edward H. Peaslee is to give a dinner for her son, Edmund W. Peaslee. Mrs. James W. Gerard, the new President of the ball, will also be a dinner hostess.

Among the boxholders for the night will be Mrs. Gerard, Mrs. Edward J. Berwind, Mrs. C. B. Alexander, Mrs. W. De Lancey Kountze, Mrs. Lawrence L. Gillespie, Mrs. Herbert L. Pratt, Mrs. Robert Livingston Gerry, Mrs. Duncan Sterling, Mrs. Thomas F. Ryan, Mrs. Witherbee, Mrs. Paul Gibert Thebaud, Mrs. Orlando Manning, Mrs. John Sanford, Mrs. Henry Eugene Meeker, Mrs. Bertram H. Borden, Mrs. Algernon Sydney Sullivan, Mrs. Marcus Daly, Dr. Edward L. Partridge, Lispenard Stewart, T. J. Oakley Rhinelander and Dr. Edward Henry Peaslee.

A souvenir is to be sold this year at the ball, with Miss Adelaide Kip Rhinelander in charge of the sale, assisted by the Misses Laura Mabon, Polly Brooks, Marguerite Doubleday, Mary Field and others. There is a very large list of patronesses this season, and a very imposing Floor Committee.

It just happens that a newly organized ball will start off the week, being in the nature of a Cupid's ball, for the benefit of Free Milk for Italy, and it will be held at the Vanderbilt Hotel. It is announced that, besides the Cupids, there will be on hand a real Apollo and a Venus. A sacred fire will also burn on Cupid's altar.

The new Italian Ambassador, Rolandi Ricci, who sailed last week for this country, has cabled his acceptance to serve as a patron.

One of the special features of the night will be a band of gypsies, consisting of over fifty girls and young men of Italian-American families. Mrs. Edward E. Breitung is acting as Chairman of the Entertainment Committee.

Much interest is being shown over the Russian Ixbe, which is to open tomorrow for a week's run, with Wednesday and Saturday matinees, at the Lexington Theatre, under the auspices of the Commonwealth Centre. Part of the proceeds will be given to the Russian refugee children by the Red Cross.

The purpose of the Commonwealth Centre is to establish a nationalization centre of arts, where foreign groups may find expression in their Old World art, to give young student artists operatic opportunities, and also to establish a children's theatre and a permanent people's playhouse.

Miss Virginia Potter is Chairman of the Executive Committee, and also heads the list of patrons and patronesses for the week at the Lexington Theatre, among whom are Mrs. Henry Ives Cobb, Mrs. William Church Osborn, Mrs. Samuel Sloan, Mrs. Adrian Iselin, Mrs. George Vanderbilt, Mrs. Willard Straight, Mrs. Dohn Barber, Mrs. Charles S. Tiffany, Mrs. Thomas L. Clarke, Mrs. John Ellsworth, and Walter Jennings, Frank L. Polk, Charles Sumner Ward and Frederick A. Wallis.

On Saturday comes the annual St. Valentine's Kettledrum at the Plaza in aid of the Samaritan Home for the Aged. It will be an afternoon affair as usual, with the customary attractions for grown-ups and children, including motion pictures, a grab bag, the sale of flowers and fancy goods. The older folks will have a chance to play coon can or auction in a room set aside for this purpose.

Mrs. Lewis Gouverneur Morris is to be in charge of the dancing and will be assisted by the Misses Rita Delafield, Betty Barber, Margaret Olivia Flint, débutantes of the season, and also some sub-débutantes, including the Misses Nancy Potter, Jeanne Reynal, Louise Barber and Eleanor Pettinos.

The card room will be presided over by Mrs. Henry Scott Rokenbaugh, Miss Antoinette Martin and Miss Margaret Remsen. Mrs. Howland Davis, Mrs. William D. Guthrie, Mrs. José Aymar and Mrs. George E. Dadmun are to preside over the refreshments, and the Misses Elise Schenkberg and Barbara Kissel are to look after the candy table.

Others who will take an active part will be Mrs. Effingham Lawrence, Mrs. Alfred Wagstaff, Mrs. William Barbour, Mrs. James Benkard, Mrs. Edwards Spencer, Mrs. Towar Bates, Mrs. Francis C. Huntington, Mrs. Clarence Gray Dinsmore, Mrs. W. Kintzing Post, Mrs. Robert L. Ables, Mrs. Elizabeth W. Post, Mrs. Ten Eyck Wendell, Miss Elizabeth Lynch, Miss Barbara Spencer, Mrs. Gustav E. Kissel and Mrs. Rudolph H. Kissel, the two latter to be in charge of the table where articles made by the inmates of the home will be sold.

Several interesting weddings are to be celebrated during the week.

Miss Margaret Hyde Hamilton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Herbert Hamilton of 449 Park Avenue, and Sydney Parker Henshaw will be married on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the Central Presbyterian Church, where her grandfather, the late Rev. Abbott E. Kittredge, was pastor for many years. The subsequent reception at the Hotel Gotham will be very small, the guests including the family and a few intimate friends.

Mr. Henshaw will give his farewell bachelor dinner on Thursday night at the Harvard Club, and Mrs. George de Forest Lord that same evening will entertain for Miss Hamilton and a group of her friends.

Miss Constance Cleveland Roberson, daughter of William Roberson of 125 East Fifty-seventh Street, will become the bride of Hayward Cutting of 22 East Sixty-second Street on Wednesday in Grace Church. The church ceremony will be followed by a reception for relatives only at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bayard Dominick Jr.

The bride will be attended by Mrs. Dominick Jr. as matron of honor, and the other attendants will be Mrs. Marguerite Payne Cameron, Mrs. William Warner Hopping Jr., and the Misses Agnes Fowler and Beatrice Eckesine.

Oliver Wolcott of Boston is to act as best man, and the ushers will be Chase H. Davis, C. Suydam Cutting, Kermit Roosevelt, G. MacCullouch Miller and John K. Hollins.

Mr. Cutting, who is the son of Mrs. Lorimer Worden, and his bride plan to spend their honeymoon in China. Mr. Cutting is a member of the expedition, headed by Roy Chapman Andrews of the Museum of Natural History, that will go to China.

On Saturday Miss Dorothy Lyons of Rye, N. Y., and Fargo Balliett will be married in the chantry of St. Thomas's Church at 5 o'clock. Mr. Balliett is a great-grandson of W. G. Fargo, founder of the Wells-Fargo Express Company.

There are to be some private dances during the week and informal entertainments.

Clarence H. Mackay is to give a small dance for Miss Katharine Mackay, who recently returned from a visit in Washington, D. C., at his town house, 3 East Seventy-fifth Street, on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Dave Hennen Morris are giving a dance for their daughter, Miss Louise Morris, also on Saturday, at their home, 19 East Seventieth Street. Several dinners will precede the dance given by Mr. and Mrs. William J. Schieffelin, Mr. and Mrs. John Henry Hammond, Mr. and Mrs. J. Horace Harding and Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Cass Ledyard.

The Music Committee of the East Side House gives a concert at the Hotel Plaza tomorrow at 3 o'clock. The assisting artists are Rafaelo Diaz, Ernest Hutcheson and Mr. and Mrs. David Mannes. Mr. Mannes is director of the music school of the East Side House.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. Stephen Baker, Mrs. Jonathan Bulkley, Miss Julia A. Fish, Mrs. Harry Harkness Flagler, Mrs. John Henry Hammond, Mrs. James Mott Hartshorne, Mrs. William A. Hazard, Mrs. Francis L. Hine, Mrs. A. Fillmore Hyde, Mrs. Adrian Joline, Mrs. J. F. D. Lanier, Mrs. Howard Townsend Martin, Mrs. Herbert L. Pratt, Mrs. Benjamin Prince, Mrs. William Ross Proctor, Mrs. William A. Read, Mrs. Henry Seligman, Mrs. Francis S. Smithers, Mrs. Lucien K. Tyng, Mrs. Ernest P. Wheeler, Mrs. John North Wilkye.

There will be only two Metropolitan dances this year instead of three. The one that was to have taken place last evening at the Ritz-Carlton has been postponed to Easter Monday.

A group of New Yorkers will attend the dance to be given by the Belgian Ambassador and Mme. de Marchienne on Friday in Washington, D. C. The Marquis Sommi, who is staying at the Ritz, and Miss Elsie de Wolfe, will attend the dance and will be guests at Mrs. Borden Harriman's dinner in Washington on Thursday evening. General Pershing and General Tasker H. Bliss will be among the other dinner guests.

The New York Kindergarten Association, in sponsoring the forthcoming production of "A Winter's Tale," which is to be given under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell Armfield at the Little Theatre, at four special performances during the coming fortnight, is placing the younger generation under a double debt of gratitude. Not only will the receipts from the play further financially the splendid work of the association in maintaining their kindergartens for children unprovided for by the city budget, but the production itself promises to be an artistic event of the season.

The text of "A Winter's Tale," as arranged for the production, has been brought within the grasp of young playgoers, with the color and music accented in most alluring episodes which should refresh any one's interest in the Elizabethan drama. The emphasis is especially laid upon the spirit of youth and upon the love story of Perdita and Florizel, which, with its disguised princes and kings, or the little lost princess who was brought up by peasants, has every ingredient of the old fascinating fairy stories.

The first performance will be a matinee on Friday at the Little Theatre, at 3:15. The second will be given Saturday morning at 10:45, and subsequent productions will be given on Friday afternoon, Feb. 11, and Saturday morning, Feb. 12.

Patrons and patronesses of the production are Mrs. William C. Dickerman, Mrs. J. Clifton Edgar, Miss Marie Louise Harrison, Mrs. L. Emmett Holt, Mrs. George B. Hopkins, Mrs. William H. Moore, Mrs. James Quan, Mrs. Kate Douglas Riggs, Mrs. I. N. Phelps Stokes, Mrs. Michael M. Van Beuren, John F. Archbold, William K. Brice, William T. Carrington, Charles Howland, George McAneny and Daniel S. Remsen.

Plans are being perfected for the pageant "Romance," which is to precede the Mardi Gras ball, to be held at the Ritz-Carlton on the night of Feb. 8, for the benefit of the Southern Industrial Educational Association.

Miss Belle Kinney is arranging the pageant, and Mrs. Henry Davenport will direct the art groups in which she will appear. The program will also have musical numbers, Rafaelo Diaz of the Metropolitan Opera Company and Mme. Carrie Bridewell being the artists.

Miss Kathleen Beale Crawford has been selected as queen of the pageant. Others who will take part will include Miss Mary Van R. Cogswell, Mrs. S. L. Wexler, formerly of New Orleans, and the Misses Carolyn Ferriday, Betty Merchant, Frances Judson, Clara and Sylvia Guthrie, Betty Baker, Peggy Wallace and Mrs. Thomas Robins Jr. A prologue, written by Mrs. Blanche S. Wagstaff, will be delivered by Miss Thais Lawton.

Mrs. Algernon Sydney Sullivan is honorary chairman of the ball, and Mrs. Livingston Rowe Schuyler, Chairman. Miss Caroline T. Burkham of 37 West Forty-ninth Street is receiving applications for tickets.

NEXT BIG WORLD'S FAIR

WITH the presentation by Dr. Paul P. Cret of plans for the arrangement of a site for the proposed Philadelphia World's Fair in 1926, Philadelphians feel reasonably assured that the sesquicentennial celebration of the signing of the Declaration of Independence will be held in their city. The plans were presented at the annual meeting of the Fairmount Park Art Association.

Dr. Cret, who is a French architect of note and Professor of Design in the School of Architecture of the University of Pennsylvania, has been prominently identified with Philadelphia's municipal improvement activities for a number of years, and his drawings are the result of a thorough study of possible sites.

The scheme is to use the Fairmount Parkway and the banks of the Schuylkill River for the creation of a great World's Fair, and the outstanding feature is the simplicity with which this may be accomplished. Philadelphia is erecting, or preparing to erect, at this time certain buildings along the Parkway which should be completed in 1926 and which can be used for the fair. These buildings are the Art Museum—which must be completed within five years, else the wonderful collection of paintings given to the city by John G. Johnson will be forfeited—the Public Library, the Auditorium and the proposed Municipal Court.

An impressive feature of the project is the construction of a bridge across the Schuylkill on the line of Arch Street, with exhibition buildings on the lower side as part of the bridge, in the style of the Ponte Vecchio, Florence. This would hide the surrounding railroad bridges and make an unusually interesting vista from the Fairmount Plaza down the river, with the fair buildings on each side. The east bank of the Schuylkill, from this Arch Street bridge to the Fairmount Plaza, is to be the location of the inevitable "Midway" features of the fair. This would be built partly over the tracks of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, which would, therefore, run under a tunnel. In this respect the plan follows that which was adopted by Paris for its 1900 Exposition.

On the west bank the large area now occupied by abattoirs, two or three factories and ash dumping spaces would be used for important groups of exhibition buildings, screening the railroad yards and facing on gardens and terraces on the river side. The machinery exhibit would be conveniently placed here, close to the railroads.

North of the Spring Garden Street Bridge, which is a passenger bridge, Dr. Cret suggests that State and national buildings should be placed on the west side. On the east side would be the Art Museum, the art centre of the fair. At the foot of this space is the Fairmount Plaza, and Dr. Cret proposes that a bridge like the famous Alexander III. bridge be thrown across the river to the west bank with a spectacular architectural feature, probably a great artificial cascade. If it is desired to use more space, a third bridge could be constructed, opening up the Lemon Hill section of Fairmount Park. The monumental entrance to the fair grounds would be on Logan Square. A great stadium, to be permanent, it is hoped, would be erected on the plot now known as Snyder's woods, and would be the scene of all sports and athletic events at the exhibition. The reservoir would be covered and used as a landing place for airplanes.

Artistic considerations aside, the proposed plan has many commercial advantages. In the first place, an entrance to it would be within ten minutes' walk of the heart of the city and of four railroad stations. The present trolley service can serve more than ten entrances to the fair, bringing people directly from every part of the city to the nearest entrance, instead of concentrating the crowds at one or two points. It is within a few minutes' walk of the hotel district and all the important shops of the city.

"The experience of the fairs of the last twenty years," said Dr. Cret, "has shown some of the following points: It is essential to the success of a fair that it be easily reached from the centre of the city, where the largest number of visitors find their lodgings. The means of access must be abundant and distributed at several points, to avoid congestion on holidays. It is an advantage to be able to use the restaurants and hotels of the city, instead of providing temporary accommodations, which seldom pay for their investment and are useless after the fair is over, if built in an outlying district.

"Most of the worlds fairs have left to the city where they were held some permanent improvement, either in city planning (the Trocadero and the Alexander III. Bridge in Paris) or in buildings (St. Louis Museum, Memorial Hall in Philadelphia, the Grand and Petit Palais in Paris, the Medieval Castle in Turin and others). It is legitimate to expect such permanent improvements, in view of the expenditure made by the city holding the fair, as one of the returns, in addition to the benefit of the local trade and the advertising to the city. Grounds with some natural landscape beauty are a great help toward popularizing the fair to the visitors (the banks of the Seine in Paris, the seashore at San Francisco, the river banks at Turin, &c.). If everything has to be created, the result is usually inadequate. It is recognized that trying to make it 'the biggest ever' is a mistake. The trend is to limit the fair to a few sections adequately represented, instead of a jumble of all branches of human activity that nobody can hope to see even in frequent visits.

"The permanent improvements likely to result from holding the World's Fair in Philadelphia in 1926 are five in number:

"1. The permanent improvement of the river banks, which is becoming more and more a necessity and which would thus be realized at once and forever.

"2. The creation of the needed new bridge between North and West Philadelphia.

"3. The completion of the Parkway.

"4. An opportunity to adjust the complicated railroad situation in that part of the city.

"5. In the case of those buildings which are only erected temporarily, an opportunity would be presented to determine their most desirable form and their most desirable location."

HOMICIDE AND PISTOL LAWS

George Le Brun's Statistics Indicate Need of Co-operation Among the Various States

FEW people realize that more than half the homicides in this country are caused by shooting, at least 75 per cent. of which have been attributed to the mere possession of a firearm. That is why I believe that our annual death rate of 10,000 to 12,000 homicides could be cut in half if every State in the Union would require a license from the police for the sale of each pistol."

George Le Brun spoke with the quiet air of a man who knows his subject. He got his experience as Secretary to the Chief Medical Examiner and the Legislation League for the Conservation of Human Life. Incidentally, he prepared the original draft for the Sullivan law in 1911 and got the late Senator Sullivan's aid in sponsoring the bill at Albany.

Restriction of the purchase of pistols is never thoroughly effective when enacted in a single State, in Mr. Le Brun's judgment, and therefore he rejoices over the prospect of a country-wide regulation of revolvers in the near future. His remedy for the high percentage of homicides by shooting lies in restricting the sale, importation and possession of small arms, except for the use of the police and military and for those persons who, from the mere character of their vocation, encounter daily dangers which warrant the carrying of arms.

"The crime wave in this country has aroused the authorities in the large cities to take steps to restrict the sale of pistols," he said. "There is now a movement either to pass a federal gun law or a uniform law similar to the Sullivan law, in every State in the Union. As secretary to the Legislation League I am taking the matter up with other organizations. As a positive means of saving human lives it is worthy of considerable consideration."

Although his survey of the effect of the Sullivan law in New York shows a decrease in crime, Mr. Le Brun maintains that it is now only partially effective.

"With a lax regulation in New Jersey, the law is practically nullified in this State, for no matter how rigidly we try to enforce it here, the criminal finds it easy to provide himself with a weapon by crossing the Hudson. Even with this disadvantage, however, the records since 1911 give sufficient indication of the benefits which would be inevitable with a national measure. In 1910, the year prior to its passage, there were 198 homicides by shooting as compared to 186 in this city the following year. In 1913 the total dropped to 180, in 1914 to 148, and downward in 1915 to 142, in 1916 to 124, and to 118 in 1917. The number increased to 178 in 1919 and to 186 in 1920, but the increase was due to the facility with which weapons could be obtained in New Jersey. Twenty-three of the last total were caused by officers in performance of their duty. In spite of the apparent decrease between 1912 and 1917, the investigation showed that many of the guns were purchased in Jersey City and Newark, where there were no restrictions of sale."

Suicides by shooting have also been reduced since the enactment of the Sullivan law, according to Mr. Le Brun's records. From 223 in 1910, the number fell to 198 in 1911, to 171 in 1912, to 162 in 1913, to 126 in 1914, 146 in 1915, to 118 in 1917, 93 in 1918, 115 in 1919 and 101 in 1920. Mr. Le Brun's analysis of these figures shows a decrease of more than 100 per cent. last year as compared to 1910, and no corresponding increase in suicides by other means.

"The law has actually saved hundreds of lives," he reasoned, "as hundreds of people shoot themselves in moments of depression simply because pistols are at hand. A person who contemplates suicide by shooting goes out to buy a revolver for the purpose, finds that before he can buy it he must first obtain a permit, has time to think it over, changes his mind and, in the majority of cases will not have recourse to other ways of quick death.

A pistol carried in one's pocket for protection Mr. Le Brun has found to be more often a menace to the possessor and the public.

"Many a man has told me that if he had not had the gun in his pocket he would never have committed murder. The man who premeditatedly goes out to shoot is comparatively rare.

"Great Britain has attacked the evil at its root. There not only is the carrying of concealed weapons strictly forbidden, but the sale of a revolver is forbidden save to persons with special permits. This license is delivered only after he has furnished the recommendations of two respectable citizens and a declaration as to whether the pistol is to be kept at home or carried on a journey. The average annual homicides by shooting in London are thus forty, as compared with 130 in New York City."

The visitor, having absorbed as many statistics as it was humanly possible to digest at one sitting, wondered how Mr. Le Brun had entered upon his meritorious campaign in the first place.

"The fearful number of shootings in this city, both homicidal and suicidal in 1910 and the shooting of Mayor Gaynor and murder of David Graham Phillips by men mentally deranged, gave me the impulse to start an agitation in favor of restricting the sale of pistols," was his answer. "I wrote to a number of prominent citizens and received so many assurances in favor of the measure, that I immediately drafted a bill.

"When the measure came up before the Senate's Code Committee, I presented the alarming increase in crime by shooting here, with letters from a number of leading citizens, judges and a number of civic organizations. The pawnbrokers especially opposed it, because it was a custom for crooks to go to a pawn shop and buy a second-hand revolver to be used in the commission of a burglary, or to settle a grudge and then pawn the weapon again. But in spite of strong opposition and the lobby that tried to defeat the bill, it became a law September 7, 1911, due to the popularity of Senator Sullivan and the persistent fight he made for it."

Will he propose to her tonight?

The fortunate girl who knows that he will if she wants him to may be a dazzling blonde or a brilliant brunette. But her serene consciousness of power comes from knowledge that her beauty is based on radiant freshness of skin which fears neither evening light nor the pitiless glare of noon.

The secret of such a complexion is cosmetic cleanliness such as was practiced by Cleopatra. A healthy skin, smooth and alluring, is within the reach of every woman.

These envied skins are developed this way

Countless women, every day, use this right method to a healthfully beautiful complexion.

First, they clean the skin. That is essential. And the only possible way is with soap.

Skins clog rapidly with oil, perspiration and dirt. Unless these secretions are washed off the tiny pores enlarge. The complexion becomes coarse. Blackheads and blotches may develop.

Whatever else you do, start with a clean skin, free from foreign matter. Whatever you add—powder, a touch of rouge—remove it before you sleep. If your skin is very dry, use cold cream both before and after washing.

Not ordinary soap

But this doesn't mean washing with ordinary soap, irritating, drying. This has led many women to quit soap.

Use a balmy soap, a soothing soap, a blend of palm and olive oils. The lather must enter the skin, so it should be bland and creamy.

This means Palmolive soap—the finest facial soap in the world. Based on oils which have for ages held supreme place as cosmetics.

The lather soothes and cleanses. It leaves the skin in soft, clean, fresh condition.

Price only 10 cents

Many women think that costlier soaps must be better. But Palmolive is the utmost in a skin soap. There is nothing better for this purpose than palm and olive oils, scientifically combined. There are no soap ingredients more costly.

We make Palmolive for the millions. It is not for the few, but for all. That's why it costs so little.

The beauties of Egypt and Rome

Ancient records show that the beauties of Cleopatra's time used palm and olive oils. And these same oils were used in Roman baths.

Then they were luxuries of the few. Today they come in a ten-cent soap, in a scientific blend. Modern experts still find them the supreme facial oils.

Take your mirror to the window

Scrutinize your skin by sunlight, which reveals all defects. Then begin today to beautify with palm and olive oils—to freshen, stimulate and revive your complexion with the soothing, creamy lather of Palmolive soap.

FASHIONS STYLES OF TODAY

IT is all very well to talk of the styles which perhaps will be, but the more interesting story is about the ones which actually are. That phase of the subject carries also a future importance, for New York really is setting the fashion, and the things that the New York smart set of women are wearing are the things that will be just right in the near future.

There are all sorts of little suggestions and ideas which have an import on the fashions to come. For instance, the prevalence of handwork is becoming more and more noticeable. The really beautiful gowns are as simple as simple can be, but they are entirely surrounded by hand stitches of one sort or another. The very seams themselves are run together by hand, for the smart dressmakers say that no gown can look so well when it has come within a stone's throw of a sewing machine. Of course, they refer to the soft frocks made of materials which lend themselves to the art of hand sewing, but when you remember that most of the fashionable frocks are of this variety, why then the statement become an important one.

If a sight-seeing trip were taken among the very well-dressed women in New York there would be large surprises awaiting the curious ones. Many are the women who are classed among the best dressers who do much of their own sewing and who do it beautifully, too. Most of the lines of these dresses are straight, most of the trimmings are done on simple enough principles, but the secret at the bottom of the smartly dressed look lies in the fact that the stitches are taken with the utmost care and the lines are studied with an absorption worthy of the concentration of great minds.

In the way of handwork the[re] are embroideries and hemstitchings and buttonings very carefully and intricately done. And there are more original ways of doing these things than would appear possible to the casual observer. It is only the woman who studies her subject exhaustively that is able to produce anything that possesses all the charm and attraction necessary for her to have about her clothes. But many are those who accomplish the feat so that even the most experienced observer would not guess that the word "amateurish" could be applied to the finished garment.

At the evening affairs of the moment there are to be seen every variety of abbreviated costume and, though reports tell of wider skirts and longer skirts, nothing like that is to be seen just now. Some of the skirts are so short they are astonishing. There seems to be not a great deal to these evening frocks except a length of very superior fabric. That it always is fabric that holds its own against all competitors. The ways in which they are made admit of little or no extraneous trimming, for they and their own lines are sufficient unto themselves and are perfectly capable of standing alone.

At the dancing places there are the sweetest little evening frocks, with very short skirts and short sleeves—almost no sleeves at all—and bodices that creep up to the throat, showing only the slightest suggestion of a low neckline, such as might be seen on any afternoon frock. One of these was made of the heaviest variety of cream white charmeuse, without the slightest bit of trimming. The edges of the sleeves and the neckline were bound with a slender white cord, and that was all there was to it. It was worn with silver stockings and silver brocade slippers that fastened with many straps over the ankle and above it.

Embroidery on one-piece evening gowns is still about the smartest thing that one can have in this sort of a frock. But the embroidery must cover the entire surface of the fabric if it is to amount to anything at all. A dress seen recently was, if the truth were known, one of the latest importations from the salon of Lanvin in Paris. It was made of black crepe satin, which, by the way, continues to be the smartest of all materials in Paris, and it was embroidered over its entire surface with silver medallions wrought from silver threads hand stitched. There was nothing by way of trimming except a silver sash tied in a quite conspicuous bow at the right side and dripping ends far below the hem of the skirt. It was one of the most elaborate gowns turned out by this house recently, but its elaboration consisted only in the embroidering, which was so cleverly done as to be, on the whole most unobtrusive. The lines of the gown were the same straight and uncompromising ones that have been used for so long.

At a dinner at one of the smarter restaurants during the last week there was seen a dress that had a decidedly longer and fuller skirt than any that have been seen in public up to this time. The gown was without doubt an epoch-maker, for there seems little question that the skirts of the frocks to come will tend toward more fullness and toward a longer line. Well, this one was made of crêpe chiffon, made over a soft, crêpy satin. Both materials were in shades of gray, the underlying fabric being a shade deeper than the one which constituted its veiling. The skirt was quite plain and full, with a broad hem in the chiffon, and the bodice was made of a succession of little petals of the gray chiffon, picoted around their edges and placed one over the other until they covered the whole space, even running over the shoulders to make intricate-looking little straps to hold the gown in place. Then the gown was provided with a salmon chiffon scarf at the waist line, just by way of adding a touch of irresistible color.

On the street one sees mostly fur coats, but the newer ones among these are worthy of notice, for they presage things to come in the fur season of 1921-22. There are fur coats that are not wraps at all, but really coats that are held closely to the waistline and have fitted sleeves. These coats have high collars and broad cuffs. While they cannot be called fitted, still they do outline the figure in the same way that the one-piece dresses are wont to do. They are newer looking than any of the wraps and decidedly youthful in their lines, for they could not cover exaggerated hips with any degree of gracefulness. One of the smartest of these seen recently was made entirely of skunks. Its straight, high collar reached the ears and meeting it there was a Russian turban—very high—made of the same fur. It was a really smart looking get-up on a very cold day and the whiteness of the fur only helped to accentuate the effect.

A coat nearly like this was made of the new taupe caracul, though it stopped short of having its collar and cuffs of the same fur. In this case they were made of kolinsky, or dyed squirrel, and the contrast in the colorings of the two furs made a quite interesting effect. Another fitted coat of this variety was made of English storm serge with a sort of invisible plaid woven into its surface. The goods was a dark, rich blue and the plaid was a deep green, which, as was said, almost disappeared into the fuzziness of the background of blue. This coat had collar and cuffs of the same material; it was warmly lined with flannel and all together made a very handsome sort of top-coat, carrying with it a great deal of style and individual character.

The dresses that are seen just now during the daytime hours are made of one of three materials—duvetyn, serge or crêpe satin. It is noticeable how very simple they all are as to line and general composition, although some of the accessories are of the handsomest and most rare of embroideries and brocades. Never before, it seems, have fabrics been so cleverly handled, so that not any of them are forced before the attention, while at the same time the richness is found to be there when a close examination is indulged in.

The gown by Lelong on this page is one of the newer models in a daytime dress. There is about it only one spot of trimming, as all of the rest of the gown is made of nigger brown silk crêpe. But the spotted embroidery belt has many colors, so that not another bit of trimming is needed to make the dress fairly shine for splendor of coloring. So with the Lanvin frock. That is a new combination of linen and serge and suggests ways and means of making other frocks where colored linen could be combined with darker serge, and so on. One French serge frock recently shown had trimmings of white organdy applied to it at various exposed edges. They were little organdy points fastened directly to the serge. This cannot be recommended for its practicality, but it does have the flavor of novelty in its favor.

Many of the newer daytime dresses in the soft silk duvetyns are being done in coat dress fashion. This style promises to be very good for Spring, as it is particularly desirable when the dress can be worn without a coat. Just now the coat dresses are worn under big fur coats which, after all, are more in the nature of top-coats and are always removed as soon as the wearer enters shelter, at which time the coat dress has a chance to appear to its very best advantage.

A coat dress of gray duvetyn (for just now this color is all the rage) was made up over a foundation of lighter gray silk crêpe. The duvetyn section of the frock closed in a slanting line across the front, was belted with a narrow leather belt and ended at the throat with a high and wrapping collar of the same material. The three-quarter sleeves had wide turned-back cuffs, repeating the collar in effect, and there was no suggestion of any other sort of trimming.

A serge coat dress in the ever-popular dark blue had a foundation dress of henna-colored satin. Then the wrappy section of the frock was outlined with a silk braid in the same shade of henna that peeped out from under the serge as it was turned back. This was a very effective gown, and its collar was done in such a way that it could be laid back or folded together about the throat. There is something about these pliable soft high collars of the thick materials which makes them particularly becoming, and they are most suitable to the coat dress, for the style would seem to call for something a little more strictly tailored and designed for street wear than the informal low collars to which we have been so irretrievably addicted.

Another coat dress worn recently at a smart restaurant was made of one of those black satins that are woven with a gray duvetyn facing. There was nothing particularly unusual about the cut of the one-piece dress, but the front of it closed very casually, so that when its wearer took a step the closing line opened gracefully, showing the heavy gray lining. At the neck line the material was very cleverly handled, so that the gray of the facing became visible again, and at the ends of the wide-cuffed sleeves the same effect was obtained. The hat that was worn with this frock was one of those new ones of black cire satin, also made without the slightest suggestion of trimming. This one was a rather glorified beret, that was cut in three sections and then folded into two folds, so that it pulled down over the right side of the hair until it touched the throat. It is only a sample of the black satin hats that are now appearing in great numbers, for they are the chosen head covering for the mid-season, and every other woman one meets has donned a black satin hat, usually without trimming. If there is any trimming it is of the least conspicuous variety and always of black. There is no place for color on these new little smart turbans.

"MY DEAR WELLS"—POSTSCRIPT

FURTHER correspondence from Henry Arthur Jones, aimed at H. G. Wells, has been sent to The London Evening Standard. In answering Mr. Wells's charge of "everlasting hooting and lying," Mr. Jones says:

"In a letter (July, 1918) published by the editor of an American magazine (quoted in The New York Weekly Review of Dec. 15, 1920) Mr. Wells has written of Lenin as follows: 'Lenin is a little beast like this (drawing of Lenin). He just wants power. • • • He doesn't want order. • • • He's a rotten little incessant egotistical intriguer. He • • • ought to be killed by some moral sanitary authority.' Recently Mr. Wells has fraternized with Lenin in the Kremlin and has called him, to be exact in placing the adjectives, 'Lenin, beloved of all that is energetic in Russia.'

"It is upon such pitiable quibbles that Mr. Wells brings against me a wholesale charge of 'everlasting hooting and lying.' • • •

"We have amongst us a group of 'thinkers' and writers who seem determined to pull the British Empire to pieces. I call them the 'Haters of England.' They always 'think' against their own country. If there is sedition and revolt in any part of the empire, they stir it up. If there is trouble at home, they foment it. Many of them are violent Internationalists with respect to the British Empire, but active, fervent patriots wih respect to Ireland, India, and Egypt. During the war they were worth many army corps to Germany. Now the war is over and we are beset with new insecurities and perils, these haters of England are busy with new intrigues against their country. Now that it is of sovereign necessity that our nation should gather itself in one great unity of aim and effort to ward off disaster, these haters of England are busy spreading disaffection and disunion both in our internal and in our foreign affairs.

"Mr. Wells is one of the most influential of these 'thinkers' and writers who always 'think' and write against England. • • •

"What I am trying to show in my letters to 'My dear Wells' is that his theories are not merely false, ill considered, unworkable, tending toward international disorder and chaos, but that, apart from the tragic mischief and misery they may cause, they are a compound of crazy but most delightful absurdities. For this reason I have chosen a tone and method of controversy which I do not commend for wide imitation, which I should not have used with an opponent of a different mental calibre from Mr. Wells, but which I think may be the most effectual for the purpose I have in view. That purpose is to show the incredible foolishness, as well as the vicious unsoundness, of the views and opinions so widely spread by those 'thinkers' and writers whom I have named the haters of England. I wish to expose the quality of the 'thinking' that inhabits and inflames their minds, and upon which they build their whole system of obstruction to the unity and security of the empire and excite their fellow citizens to work for its disorganization and dismemberment."

DRIVE FOR ST. MARY'S

BISHOPS CHESHIRE of North Carolina and Gailor of Tennessee have made an appeal which is getting results among members of the Episcopal Church in New York, particularly those of Southern birth. It is in behalf of St. Mary's School, at Raleigh, N. C.—one of the most venerable educational institutions for young women.

The desired fund of $300,000 has been apportioned two-thirds to the Carolinas and one-third outside, and the New York committee is expected to raise a considerable part of it. Mrs. Charles Baskerville is a leading member. She is being helped by others in the North and South Carolina societies.

FOR BUSINESS TRAINING.

PROFESSIONAL training in commerce and industry for young men and women who have had university training but are lacking in business knowledge will be offered in the newly established graduate division of the School of Commerce of Northwestern University. Only those who hold a degree from a collegiate, scientific or professional school of recognized standing will be admitted to the graduate division.

Tests That Prove Muslin Quality

Perhaps you have bought muslin that looked fine in the store, but appeared thin as cheesecloth after washing.

That muslin was adulterated with chalk. Sometimes this powder is added so cunningly that your only test is thorough washing.

Other times the chalk is added so coarsely that you can detect it when buying. Just make this simple test: Rumple the muslin briskly—the fine white powder will fall on the counter.

Fruit of the Loom is a high-quality muslin that will stand the most severe tests.

Fruit of the Loom
Muslin

Test Fruit of the Loom at the counter when buying it. You can prove to yourself that it is well made.

It launders perfectly. Washing after washing does not harm its fine, smooth texture. It does not lose its firm body. For Fruit of the Loom is all muslin. It is not filled up with chalk.

Buy a bolt of this reasonably-priced muslin. Even if you keep it for years, Fruit of the Loom won't turn yellow.

Look for the Fruit of the Loom label—picture of fruit in colors. Every good store has it.

ART EXHIBITIONS OF PAINTINGS

THE Keppel Gallery is showing an unusually interesting exhibition of Whistler lithographs. It includes a considerable number printed by Way and others printed by Goulding. The latter are proofs pulled from the stones that were left by Whistler to his executrix, Miss Birnie Philip, and the paper used in the printing was, so long as it lasted, the beautiful old paper for which Whistler searched eagerly and knowingly and of which he left a small supply for this final tirage. After the proofs were pulled the stones were covered with a transiucent varnish through which the drawing could be seen, but which put an end to the printing.

In the revised edition of Mr. Way's catalogue of 1896 he refers to the fact that shortly after 1896 all the stones with Whistler's drawings upon them were withdrawn from the keeping of his printers and placed in the cellars of his solicitors, where they remained until after his death, when Mr. Goulding made the final printing. "Now, lithographic stones with drawings upon them require attention from time to time," Mr. Way explains, "especially if they are grained stones, as the greater part of Whistler's were, else the ink dries too hard, so that when they are next taken in hand after a long interval they are liable to suffer serious deterioration in the effort made to recover the printing qualities. The delicate work weakens by neglect and the stronger parts are apt to become overstrong in the printer's effort to recover the weaker. The result is a muddy, heavy-looking print when compared with an early proof." As only fifty-five out of nearly a hundred subjects handed over to the solicitors were exhibited at the time of the exhibition of the reprints made after Whistler's death, Mr. Way draws the conclusion that many of the stones did thus meet with disaster. The Goulding prints in the Keppel exhibition, seen side by side with the Way prints of the same subjects, hold their own extremely well, but there is none that more perfectly records the characteristic light but certain modeling of the artist, and there are several in which something seems to have been lost—the continuity of a curving shadow is broken or the swift, subtle play of delicate darks over the larger surfaces is diminished and robbed of distinction. Note, for example, the "Mother and Child No. 1." In the proof pulled by Way the richly modeled features of the mother are veiled by the mystery Whistler evokes with his interlace of feathery strokes. The beauty of the face lies wholly in the atmospheric treatment and the beauty is haunting. In the Goulding proof something has happened—what, only an experienced printer and artist can say—and the face has become commonplace with a certain ordinary prettiness; the face, that is, of your model or mine or the model of the artist in the next studio, but not of Whistler's model.

If only the Goulding proofs were shown, there is so much that is fine in them and the charm of the ancient paper is so compelling that few would cavil at these faint evidences of diminished force, but a comparative showing invites comparisons, and nothing is better fun in a season of rampant commonplace.

Scholarship Competition.

A scholarship competition open to all art students in the United States, with the exception of those in New York City, will be held at the Art Students' League of New York on March 25, 1921.

Ten scholarships will be awarded to that work showing the greatest promise. Work in any medium, from life, the antique, landscape, etching, portrait, illustration, composition, also photographs of sculpture, may be submitted. All work should be forwarded so as to reach the league not later than March 19, and must be sent with return express or parcel post charges prepaid.

Students entering for this competition are urged to send the most comprehensive exhibition possible, to facilitate the work of the jury. The league wishes to emphasize that the jury will be guided in making its awards, not by the degree of proficiency displayed by the applicants, but by an effort to find interesting individuals whose strength the league desires to add to its own.

The scholarships thus given will enable the holder to free tuition in any two classes of the league during the season of 1921-22, as in the classes in the Woodstock Summer School of Landscape and Figure Painting for the season of 1921. The jury will consist of the following instructors of the league: George B. Bridgman, A. Stirling Calder, Arthur Crisp, Guy Pene Du Bois, Frank B. Dumond, Andrew Dasburg, Thomas Fogarty, Fred W. Goudy, Robert Henri, Leo Lantelli, George Luks, Wallace Morgan, Kenneth H. Miller, Edward Penfield, Charles Rosen, Boardman Robinson, John Sloan, Max Weber and Mahonri Young.

The American Academy in Rome.

The American Academy in Rome announces its competitions for the prizes of Rome in architecture, painting and sculpture, which take place annually. The next competition in architecture will take place in 1923. The purpose of these competitions is to select from among the available practitioners and advanced students in each of the arts of architecture, sculpture, painting and landscape architecture in the United States the one best fitted to fill for three years the position of Fellow of the American Academy in Rome.

That one is best fitted whose natural capacities, general culture and professional training are such that he can best gain in the three years of his Fellowship, and apply to the advancement of art in the United States after his return, a keen understanding of the qualities which give to the classics in all the arts their universal appeal, of the technical methods by which those qualities were secured in classic examples of his own art, and of the inter-relation of the arts with each other and with the general civilization of which they are a part.

Candidates are therefore to be judged not merely by their solutions of the specific problem set before them in these competitions, but also by any competent corroborative evidence of their fitness which they may submit.

The following Fellowships are awarded by the Academy: A Fellowship in architecture, of the value of $1,000 a year; in sculpture, of the value of $1,000 a year; in painting, of the value of $1,000 a year; in landscape architecture, of the value of $1,000 a year. The Fellowships in architecture, sculpture, and painting are awarded annually and that in landscape architecture every third year. The awards are made after competitions which are open to unmarried men, citizens of the United States, who comply with the regulations of the Academy.

Lecture and Exhibition.

In the Municipal Gallery, 40 Irving Place, where the art exhibition of the Association for Culture is being held, Clara Ruge will give a lecture Sunday, Jan. 30, at 3:30 P. M., on the "Characteristics of American Art," illustrated by aid of the paintings in the exhibition. The lecture and the exhibition are free. The latter contains works of many of the leading American artists of this city, such as Eugene Higgins, Albert L. Groll, Robert Henri, William R. Leigh, Gustave Wiegand, Georg P. Ennis, Henry S. Eddy, Frank Hazell, P. J. Stengel, H. Vance Swope, Georg L. Berg, E. A. Kramer, James Welland and others.

The exhibition brings art to a great many people, because the Washington Irving Building is not only frequented by about 6,000 students and many teachers, but it is also a centre for lectures, musicales and various gatherings held in the adjoining auditorium.

The exhibition is open to Feb. 28 every day, including Sunday, till 10 P. M.

Portraits by Modern French Artists, in Etching and Lithography.

At the Public Library, the third in the series of exhibitions of French prints, to be on view in the Stuart Gallery throughout February, will be devoted to portraits by modern masters. In such a show the interest of subject adds its strong appeal. Most of the people portrayed are nineteenth century Frenchmen, and not a few of them are artists. So we have, in etching, Cogniet, interpreted by Bonnat; Whistler, by Guerard; Seymour Haden, by Flameng and Legros (mezzotint); Bracquemond, by Rajon and Delteil; Legros and Meryon, by Bracquemond; Renoir, Daumier and Manet, by Desboutin, who has also dry-pointed himself with rich gesture. Delatre, the noted printer of etchings, is presented by Legros, Flameng, and by his son Eugene (in a wood cut). And there is Bracquemond's big half-length of Ed. de Goncourt, Carrière's presentation of the same subject in a mystic sauce, and Gavarni's crayon sketch of the Goncourt brothers, which one may contrast, for lithographic technique, with Grevedon's portraits of ladies, of a smooth elegance. Legros offers contrasts himself—the head of Tennyson, of a silver-point-like delicacy, and the more vigorously crayoned heads of Champfleury and E. D. Adanjs. Other littérateurs: Hugo, by Leveria and by Rodin, Dumas, by Baude (wood engraving) and our own Hawthorne and Poe, by Lefort. And yet other artists represented: Raffaëlli and Helleu, Gaillard and Manet, and Eguzquiza.

Exhibition in Manhattan of Brooklyn Society of Etchers.

The first exhibition in Manhattan of the work of the Brooklyn Society of Etchers will be held at the new Brown-Robertson Galleries beginning Feb. 1 with an informal reception to associate members and ending Feb. 21. The society was founded five years ago by a group of artists to whom the Brooklyn Museum extended its hospitality, giving them its print galleries for their exhibitions. Until this year no other exhibitions have been held by the society, but at the close of the Fall exhibition this year the American Federation of Arts selected a representative number of prints to go on tour in various cities, and the Brown-Robertson Galleries invited the society to extend its exhibition to Manhattan. Although named the Brooklyn Society, the members come from many different cities of the United States. A talk on the objects of the society, on the status of American etching, methods of making etchings, &c., will be given by Will Simmons on Friday, Feb. 4, at 5 P. M. Etchings and mezzotints in color will be printed in public at the gallery at 4:30 P. M. on Feb. 12, 13, and 14, by Frederick Reynolds, Will Simmons and Paul Roche. Throughout the exhibition there will be a showcase with tools and plates showing various stages of work.

SENECAS' FIGHT FOR LAND

Aroused Over Encroachment of Power Companies in Niagara River

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 28.—The Seneca Indians are making a determined effort to protect their rights in the Niagara River, according to George P. Decker, a Rochester attorney, counsel for the Senecas, who appeared recently before the Federal Power Commission in Washington, D. C., to look after the Indians' interests.

According to the Senecas, they never ceded their rights to territory of the river bed above Niagara Falls, although they did sell the islands and the shore land to the State down to the water's edge. The Indians enjoyed all their rights in the river up to 1842, when they gave up the Buffalo Creek homelands.

The Indians were aroused by a Congressional bill in 1914, when that body was considering the issuing of permanent permits at Niagara Falls for power diversion. The Indians asserted that the bill failed to recognize the rights of their tribe. The matter was taken up by the various Federal departments, and was under investigation at the time when war broke out between Germany and the Allies. The Senecas withheld protests against temporary war-time diversions, but now intend to resume defense of their rights. All forms of permits for diversions issued by the Federal Government have now expired, but the power companies continue using the river and in an increased volume. New York State at this present time is threatening to make additional concessions to the power companies, the Indians declare, under the pretense of its own authority. The recent Federal Power act, which authorizes permits for the development of navigable waters for power, does not specifically authorize projects in the Niagara River. The Indians have entered protests with the Federal Power Commission against applications for permits. The Senecas have called on Attorney General Palmer of the Department of Justice to appear before the commission in behalf of the Indians, and the Attorney General has asked for full information, which has been sent to him.

If the United States takes over the river bed rights from the Indians it means that New York State will have no standing to authorize developments of Niagara power, and thus a long controversy between the State and the Federal Government will be ended.

According to the Indians the State has made grants of land under the water at Niagara, which it was without a right to do. The Senecas say they will not go into the white men's courts for themselves to establish their rights, but insist that the United States make good its pledges of protection made some 130 years ago in the treaties of Fort Stanwix and Canandaigua. When the Power Commission asked for information regarding the claim of the Indians to the land beneath the Niagara River, Mr. Decker, counsel for the Senecas, in his reply, said in part:

"The Senecas, because of their independence as a people, stand now as heretofore on the rights naturally inseparable from that status. In exercise of those rights, freely acknowledged by the United States of America at the time, they in conjunction with their tribal associates treated with the United States at Fort Stanwix in the year 1784, whereby friendship was pledged and it was mutually agreed that the Senecas would accept and that the United States would extend protection to the Senecas in their tribal rights and interests, and these agreements were later confirmed at Fort Harmar.

"Those rights and interests then included tribal proprietorship in territorial possessions and tribal dominion therein, and those possessions were there recognized by the United States as being outside the sphere of the white man's dominion.

"The Senecas consider that, because of the treaty of Fort Stanwix, no burden has rested on them to defend themselves against these aggressions. That burden, whatever necessary self-restraint or action it may involve, was assumed by the United States at Fort Stanwix. It cannot be out of place to say here that any failure of the United States to restrain itself or to extend protection as against others, after notice of the need, must constitute a breach of these treaties and entail responsibility to the Senecas.

"The facts from which these Seneca rights arise must ever be a matter of cognizance to the United States. The pending applications for permits are plainly disrespectful of these rights of the Senecas. The Senecas do not discover in the Federal Power act an actual intent of Congress to authorize invasion of this Seneca domain for hydraulic uses or developments. That domain, has been, from remote times, the home land of the Senecas. It was never domain of the United States or of European colonists. It never was territory reserved, furnished, allotted or set apart at any time by the United States to the Senecas.

"The Senecas' treaty cession of the parcel which included upper Niagara to the United States at Fort Stanwix, was not in fact authorized or acquiesced in by the Seneca inhabitants thereof, and they did not in fact vacate it.

"The attempt of the United States at Fort Stanwix to take it was later recognized by President Washington and Congress as an injustice, and treaty title to the territory was at last restored at Canandaigua in 1794 with intent to avoid injustice and to leave the domain with the Senecas as fully as though the cession of it to the United States had never been sought or attempted. The upper Niagara was constantly used and enjoyed by the Senecas down to the year 1842, when their people gave up their Buffalo Creek home lands and removed from the vicinity. If, however, the commission shall construe the Federal Power act to permit or intend Federal authority for use of the upper Niagara, though it be Seneca domain, then as to the making of the grants the Senecas stand both on their natural rights in Seneca domain and on their treaty rights in respect thereto as against the United States, and protest against the making of the grants, denying the authority of Congress, and would charge that such grants constituted a claiming of Seneca domain and that operations conducted thereunder constituted disturbance of the Senecas by the United States, in violation of its treaty stipulations, and would require of the Senecas that they hold the United States responsible accordingly for the acts of its agents. • • •

"Holding, as above made clear, that they are not subjects of the United States or of any member thereof, the Senecas reserve to themselves judgment as to their rights and must refrain, in consequence, from submission of determination thereof to United States departments. The Senecas trust, nevertheless, that this statement of their position, required by truth and natural self-consideration, will not lose for them, in applying for the protection by and self-restraint of the United States due them under their treaties, the friendly consideration at the hands of your Government which the Senecas had the right at Fort Stanwix, at Fort Harmar and at Canadaigua to expect in the operation of the solemn engagements there negotiated and concluded. With confidence in the justice of their position, they invoke protection here for their rights in Niagara through refusal by the commission to entertain applications for the permits sought.

The Senecas have asked the United States to bring suit to restrain New York State from further interference with upper Niagara. They say that they hope the people of the United States will be willing to take a cession of these Seneca rights.

PEACE FOR HOME BREWERS

IF one wanders through the remote fastnesses of the old Post Office Building at Park Row and Broadway, and climbs endless circular staircases, it is possible to get at least a partial idea of what the prohibition enforcement machine is doing.

Makers of "home brew" may rest in peace a while longer. One of the Assistant United States Attorneys remarked to the visitor that he thought it would be some time before they got around to "finishing up" the home brewers. Most of them aren't making more than 1 per cent. beer, anyway, whatever their claims may be. The officers are too busy looking up saloon cases to bother with the home-brew people.

"Stills? Why, yes, we have two or three still cases a week," he said. "It has always been against the law to make alcohol that way, but all the stills used to be down in Kentucky. Now we have them right here in New York. But the saloons and the 'blind tigers' take up most of the time.

"There used to be probably 10,000 saloons in New York. There probably aren't more than a thousand now. As the leases expire, most of the saloon keepers go out of business. I had that straight from a liquor dealer. Our men can't do anything on suspicion, you know. They have to get evidence. That's why it will be hard to reach the home brewers. We can't just walk into a house and search it on suspicion that they are making real home brew or have a still on the premises. We've got to have evidence before we can go in.

"Cases? Look at that table over there. Each one of those folders is a case. Consider the condition here in New York. We have two Judges who do this work for some eight million people. If a good many of the men didn't plead guilty the calendar would run about six months behind every week. As it is, many who plead guilty get off with fourteen days. A liquor lawyer told me the other day that one of his clients had just returned from the Tombs and said he had found all his old bartending friends up there. They didn't have a bad time at all. They had a regular whisky dealers' reunion.

"If they have been caught selling liquor and don't plead guilty, then they are let out on bail, and when they come to trial they get a much more severe sentence—from sixty to ninety days, sometimes more.

"The home-brew cases haven't been touched here in New York, because most of them aren't fit for prosecution. You know what a New York jury would do about a man's making home-brew in his house. It would decide, probably, that he had a perfect right to do it. When the saloons get cleaned out—and they never will be cleaned out absolutely, but will become much scarcer than they are now—the average citizen won't drink, simply because a drink is too hard to get."

He was interrupted by a little man with a hat down over one ear who had come in the doorway. "Our case is coming up in the morning. Can you get —— here then?"

The little man smiled broadly. He was a necessary witness for the Government in a case against a denizen of the underworld who had been breaking the law. "Well, —— is in the hospital now," said he. "I think I can get him here tomorrow. I had to get a quart to get him to the hospital, but I'll try to have him here for you tomorrow."

After a few more instructions as to court procedure, the witness left. He gave repeated promises to do his best to lead the hospital patient to the stand. The assistant prosecutor resumed his remarks on the saloon situation:

"People send in complaints. They are almost all just suspicion. We ourselves are suspicious enough. We know where things are going on, but that sort of evidence doesn't count in court. We've got to get them by buying liquor from them or actually witnessing sales. The little home brewers can worry along for a while longer."

MOHAWK VALLEY HISTORY

INTERESTED in the preservation of historic landmarks and records, a group of individuals representing patriotic organizations of various kinds has just organized the Mohawk Valley Historic Association. The name is self-explanatory.

The territory in which the operations of the corporation will be principally conducted is within the Counties of Oneida, Herkimer, Fulton, Montgomery, and Schenectady.

Among the groups represented in the organization are the Sons of the American Revolution, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the county historical societies and the United States Daughters of 1812.

Interest in the work is to be maintained by periodic publications containing papers on the historical landmarks of this section of the State. The first issue appeared this month. The second and third are scheduled for March and August, 1921, respectively.

Membership in the association is open to all. There are no fees other than that of an initial contribution of $1 to pay for the publication and mailing of printed matter. The Secretary of the organization is Hanford Robison, 323 State Street, Schenectady, N. Y.

56th ANNIVERSARY SALES

Every Part of the Store Combines to Give the Year's Best Values

We have planned this extraordinary merchandise event, in celebration of the store's 56th Anniversary, for two reasons:

FIRST, to help our customers to VALUES, when they are being most eagerly looked for.

SECOND, to help the great American manufacturers to keep going under full steam.

We have bought large lots of desirable goods for cash, and shall sell them for prices that cover barely more than the cost to us of the goods, and our low cost of doing business—due to efficient operation and owning our own store property.

Here are a few of the astonishing offerings:

Women's Fine Plush Coats, $29.95

An extraordinary purchase! One model has an all-round belt and large convertible collar; the other is a loose-backed model, with large cape collar. Silk lined throughout and warmly interlined.
A. & S.—Second floor, Central.

3,000 Samples—Trimmed Hats, $1.89

Ready-to-wear tailored and attractively trimmed styles. Of milan, milan-hemp, porcupine, Jap and novelty straws, as well as new fabrics.
A. & S.—Mezzanine, East.

Women's New Frocks, $19.75

New models in Wool Tricotine, Poiret Twill, beaded Georgette Crepes, Satins or Taffetas—for large or small women. Trimmed with embroideries and beaded effects. Sizes 34 to 46. Colors, black, navy, brown, taupe.
A. & S.—Second floor, Central.

Women's All-Wool Skirts, $7.95

Plaids or stripes of desirable color combinations. Full pleated models, with self belts, in sizes ranging from 25 to 32-inch waistbands.
A. & S.—Second floor, Central.

36-inch Hudson Seal Coats, $245.00

36-inch Coats with the desirable full-sweep that every woman seeks. 15-inch cape collars and flaring bell cuffs. Lined throughout with lovely designs of Pussy Willow silks.
A. & S.—Second floor, Central.

Women's Spring Suits, $37.50

Strictly tailored Tricotine models, one trimmed with bias bands of self material; the other piped with silk braid. Link button Tuxedo model coats. Black, navy or tan. Sizes 34 to 44.
A. & S.—Second floor, Central.

Women's Patent Leather Pumps, $3.60 pr.

Small tongue, medium vamp, Louis heels. Sizes 2½ to 8 in widths AA, A and B predominating and some of the sizes in wider widths.

Once a City of Wit and Cleverness, the French Capital Now Craves American Rhythms From Sunset to Dawn

By V. BLASCO IBAÑEZ

THE night life of Paris, after an interruption of five years from darkened streets and airplane raids, has gone back to what it used to be—more or less.

I don't know whether I should stress the more or less. It is more, certainly, when you consider that the number of establishments devoted to the service of the devil has tripled, at least, in number. It is less, when you bear in mind that the route over which Parisians are now choosing to go to perdition is an entirely new one.

The Paris of the present is as different from the Paris of 1914 as wicked is from naughty. Compare what you see today with the Paris of twenty years ago, when I was in my bohemian prime—the so-called Paris fin de siècle—and you see scarcely any resemblance at all.

Am I an "old fogey"? Are all of us "old fogeys"? I don't know. But still most of my friends who know the Paris of 1890, the Paris of 1900 even, agree with me in missing something in the Paris of today. Paris, in the old days, was "spiritual," a city of wit, where you got along by saying clever things and doing clever things. You were a real "Parisian" when you could wipe the gloom off the face of an undertaker by a "mot," a pun, a jest, delivered with just the right play on words, with some illuminating insight into the deeper things of life. And in those days—you must excuse the "old fogey's" looking back to the Golden Age—in those days people went to Paris to have a good time, yes, but a good time that consisted in hearing intelligent people "talk well," and in saying something that would make intelligent people laugh. There was a literary atmosphere about the crudest revelry. Famous among the "joints" of the Montmartre section were the "artistic" cabarets like "The Black Cat," from which many famous writers of today, many members of the present French Academy, graduated with honor, or dishonor, as you choose to call it. Devotees of Parisian gayety lived on the margin of society's manners and morals, but there was intellectuality and refinement in the worst of their capers; and the capital of the world of pleasure had much to remind one of the licentious cultivation of old Athens.

And now * * * well, Paris, the Paris that lives between sundown and sunrise, does only one thing and knows how to do only one thing. It dances, and it dances. That is all.

Few of the artistic cafés that were famous before 1914 have opened since the war; or, if they did open again for a time, they closed their doors. They proved at once to be something affected, something artificial, without an inner soul to give life to their activities. Restaurants, cafés, cabarets have all turned into dance halls. Many theatres even have cut their stages down to a level with the floor, and now advertise themselves as dancing places. And all the new establishments that daily come into being hang out the same sign; curiously enough that sign is in English: DANCING! What is true of Paris is true also of the cities of the "provinces," and of the European capitals that try to mimic Paris.

People either prefer not to talk, or else do not know how to talk, any longer. It is as though the brains of Europe had trickled down into hips and legs and feet. Those are the only parts of the human body that express feelings or ideas in Paris and in Europe today. Young couples dance in silence. They have no time to exchange even a few words of love. In the old days, boys and girls used to look forward to balls and dances as an occasion to talk with one another freely; they would frequently "sit out" whole evenings to do their flirting under cover, as it were, of the brilliant illumination and of the crowds. When they did dance occasionally it was to go on talking to the rhythm of moving feet. Now the young people dance like so many clergymen at a funeral. They whirl about stiffly, their brows knitted, their teeth set, an expression of deep reflection on their faces, as if they were trying to solve some problem of mathematics. The dances of today are complicated things requiring the dancer to concentrate all his mental faculties on them. To follow the arithmetical movements of a Parisian tango is like doing an example in differential or integral calculus, which is the base of the engineer.

It is easy to understand how a man occupied in important meditations of this kind has little time for conversation with the woman he is holding by the waist. In reality she is not a "woman" in any ordinary sense of the word—she is a collaborator, an associate, an assistant in a great work of art. People used to dance out of emotional interest in their partners. Now they dance just to dance. In the old days, you asked a girl to dance because she was pretty, or distinguished, or attractive, or for some other selfish reason. Now you take them just as they come, pretty or ugly, intelligent or stupid, provided they wear a short light skirt, and are able to assist you in executing the sublime movements you are going through with your feet.

"But people always danced," some one may object. That is true. But formerly dancing occupied a secondary rôle among human pleasures. The elegant, artistically conceived dinner, music, singing, especially light, brilliant conversation, were the principal diversions of Parisians; and only as a variation in these solider pleasures was dancing invoked to break monotony or introduce a note of youthful simplicity into more strenuous and serious amusements. Could any one, in the old days, have believed it possible to leave the table between entree and roast to do a one-step or a tango? Was it conceivable that a man and a woman should postpone a funny story till they came back from a fox trot? Or that a theatre could abolish its stage to make more room for the audience to dance? In the old dance halls, besides, most people looked on, where professionals paid by the management danced about among the tables.

These professionals are still retained, but as a matter of tradition, and out of fear that the enthusiasm of the public may at any moment go cold. But in reality they are no longer necessary. The patrons of a restaurant keep things going of their own accord and without pay; and a well dressed woman, of whatever age, is afraid of being taken for somebody hopelessly passée if she doesn't go whirling about among the tables on the arm of a man, every time the orchestra begins to play.

Fatigue, tiredness, are words that have lost all meaning for people of all ages. To set down your teacup and saucer the moment the orchestra strikes up a time is said to be "très Americain"! And as everything "American" is in the height of fashion, people have become slaves to the orchestra conductor, who, at his own sweet will, moves a baton and sets a room full of people to cavorting over a floor. And the musical instruments are no longer those which Wagner or Beethoven had in mind in their compositions. They are tom-toms from the savage tribes, automobile horns, mechanisms that imitate the crashing of a pile of dishes falling or an apartment house collapsing, moans and grunts and snores, all the noises that in former times would have been considered shocking among cultivated people.

The music of the day, which is the rage of the entire world, it seems, and serves to satisfy the artistic craving of those who are distinctly hoi polloi, is purely American music. America is the piper for the rest of the planet in this matter of dancing. And when I say America I mean either North or South America; for, from whichever of the American continents the modern music comes, it is always the music of the negro. Though, for the first time, this music is being written down on paper by white men, it is still the naif inspiration of negro composers, who, scratching their woolly heads, drew these tunes from gourds and calabashes.

The first inventors of the Argentine tango, the Brazilian maxixe, and the numberless dances of Cuba were all negroes. The African race has a great sense of cadence. The negro could never write an opera nor a symphony; but he has an unquestioned superiority in all musical emotions that can be expressed through the feet. Likewise the numberless dances that in the last twenty years have been growing popular in the United States, thence to emigrate to the rest of the world, are grandchildren, when not children, of this same negro music. In the field of music the place of the negro today is that of the Jews in the field of religion. The Christians took the sacred writings, the prophets and much of the ritual of the Jews and paid the latter back by persecuting them implacably for centuries. So the negro is today despised and ridiculed; but the moment a white man and a white woman hear a piece of inconcrent, disconnected music written by some coal-colored Orpheus, they simply have to grab each other by the waist and begin to move their feet, bumping into other couples who are doing the same thing!

The negro seems to have inherited that legendary violin the devil was said to own in the Middle Ages, and with which he could set whole cities, grandparents and grandchildren, men and women, girls and boys, to dancing, dancing, dancing till they fell dead from sheer exhaustion.

Meanwhile a new career, a brilliant and glorious way of rising in the world, has been opened before the younger generation: the career of the fashionable dancer.

There used to be a saw which ran: "Journalism leads to everything provided you leave the profession soon enough." Many heads of governments, many great writers, many multi-millionaires began as simple newspaper reporters. We may well revise that apothegm today: "Dancing leads to everything and you don't have to leave the profession at all."

I should not go so far as to say that you can get up to be President of France by knowing how to do a tango or a fox trot well. But I am quite willing to say that a good dancer can easily become the son-in-law of a President, of a Prime Minister, or anything of the kind, with practical certainty of owning his millions some day. You see, this dancing craze is still too recent.

We don't know just how far a man can really go "on his own legs"; but I'll bet that within twenty years people will be saying of this and that distinguished and influential man: "Why, he started as a dancing master, married that wife of his who had twenty millions, went into business and got where you see him now."

Family dramas in Europe have now changed their style and the language entirely. Now, when millionaire parents object to their daughter's marrying a poor boy of unknown family and with no visible means of support, whom the young lady has met in some of the dansants, they get the following:

"Either I marry that boy or I kill myself. Why, he's the only man I can dance with well. Our two souls move in perfect rhythm, as if they were one. We understand each other absolutely. How else could our feet keep such perfect time? I should die if some other girl got him for a husband."

In the old days women were the most conspicuous people at a ball, and they seemed to rule like queens over those present. Now the queens have been dethroned. There are only kings—famous dancers with wasplike waists, hair combed straight back over their foreheads, and waving over the staffs of their necks like black flames on a torch, and who go around with long faces as though what they were doing were the most serious business in the world.

These young men are the lions of every public place where dancing goes on from ten o'clock till early in the morning. The women present, a heterogeneous mixture of respectable ladies with a sprinkling of cocottes, point them out to one another and mention their names in the same hushed reverence with which, a half century ago, people, under the same circumstances, would say, "That is Victor Hugo," or "That is Gambetta." Many of these boys see their names featured on the electric signs of the establishments the way stars are advertised for a theatre or an opera. When they are not dancing in Paris they are covering themselves with glory in the casinos of Trouville, Nice, or Vichy. They are now getting their living for what, a few years ago, cost them money as an amusement. And fading beauties fall in love with them the way they do with actors.

Those who are not professionals, who spurn the title of "maestro" and refuse to take money, are the objects of greatest worship. Such men you can see between four and seven in the afternoon in the hotel grillrooms along the Avenue des Champs Elysées or the Rue de Rivoli, in all the "palaces" where tea is served with dancing. The interesting thing is that most of these "heroes" are fortuneless boys from one or the other of the Americas, who know how to dance and are trying to carve out a social position for themselves by virtue of their legs.

You remember how the old romantic novel went, "A poor but interesting young man," who finished by marrying a princess of Europe or an heiress from the United States. And you remember how he accomplished those prodigies—by rescuing the heroine from under the feet of a runaway horse or saving her from a gang of wild bandits in Italy.

Our modern hero is made of gentler stuff and he has a career much less exciting. To get in touch with his heiress he scarcely needs an introduction at all. He just hangs around the dance halls of fashionable hotels, and, if he hangs around long enough, eventually he meets her.

The male was never so high on the market as at present. Girls out for husbands seem to form a halo of glory around the head of any good male dancer—the face of a thoughtful man thinking of nothing. When the music starts, the dancer rises from his seat, adjusts a handkerchief delicately over one sleeve, and goes toward a young lady. She blushes with pride and delight, walks half way to meet him, and virtually throws herself into his arms. And mamma also smiles and blushes and blushes and smiles. Her daughter is dancing with a celebrity. What an honor for the family! How jealous all those other mothers and girls are going to be!

Poor mothers of these after-the-war days! Their biggest job is to find a famous dancer for their daughters. How can a girl in society be really "chic" if she is without a dancing partner all her own? The young lady finds life intolerable without some such distinction. She gets blue and cross, and ends by causing scenes in the family circle. A young girl who is really in the swim goes to fashionable parties now with her celebrated dancing partner and keeps him carefully to herself. The girl who goes without her man doesn't get a chance to dance at all. Her friends never let go of the one they have, and the men, for their part, never have a moment to themselves. It's just one more job in the sorry life of a woman with a daughter to launch in the world. There used to be the dressmaker, and then the millinery artist, and then the jeweler, and then the makeup lady and the hairdresser. France got Alsace-Lorraine out of the war, but the French mother has won only the additional task of finding a celebrated dancer for her female offspring.

Now I, personally, never dance, but I often go to teas and watch the dancing. As I sit there alone by myself I come sooner or later to attract attention. I happen to be known, more or less, around some of the hotels in question. Well, at tea time I begin to notice that all kinds of affectionate glances are coming my way from a number of much revamped, remodeled beauties, who now see their fading charms rejuvenated only in the loveliness of young daughters. The good women begin by praising my novels, frequently without having read one of them. Then they go on to praise my goodness of heart, though they know nothing at all about me. And finally they get to the point:

"Oh, I just heard! You have been in America, haven't you? Wonderful place, isn't it? All those skyscrapers and things! I should so like to see them! I suppose you know a great many people in the United States * * * ?"

"I did spend a year, more or less, on the other side of the ocean. I know a good many people there. If I can introduce you to any of them * * * "

"Oh, that's just lovely of you. Well, now, you probably know any number of young men over there who dance. And I do so want to find one for Marcelle. Then there is Julie, too, who would like a real American dancer. Of course, if not from the United States, South America will do. In fact, I prefer Argentines myself, such cute little feet, don't you know, and they dance so light-like, graceful, something a bit more 'chic' than anybody else."

Considering the Parisian ideal of the moment, the "American dancer," the hero of the up-to-date romance, must be a dark complexioned young man, with a pale face, big antelope eyes, a short arched foot, and a birthplace either in Buenos Aires or Rio Janeiro. Second best comes the tall blonde boy, and he must hail from New York. Heaven knows where, in reality, most of them do come from. Few of them probably never had a father or mother!

The dancing craze has inverted the rôles of the two sexes in the great comedy of life. In the old days men went wrong over women, men over 40 especially, who in a few weeks of foolish infatuation with a chorus girl would throw away the savings and the career of a lifetime of work and struggle. Now, if you please, it is women—over 40—who go wrong over what, with my reader's indulgence, I am going to call men.

The dancing master reaches such extremes at times that people otherwise of quite conservative frames of mind come to be real howling revolutionists. The police are always in trouble when it comes to enforcing closing time ordinances. Proprietors and waiters in dancing restaurants are usually more than willing to go home when the time comes. Not so the public, often. Sometimes you see the police actually using force to drive men in dress suits and women in evening gowns out upon the streets.

A few nights ago I witnessed such a cleaning out, after 2 in the morning, a fashionable establishment on the Avenue des Champs Elysées. When they refused to obey the order to go home the electric lights were turned off. The throng collected in anger on the sidewalks outside the doors and when the orchestra players came out they were taken prisoners and compelled to go on with their music. And the people began to dance again over the asphalt pavements.

The officers tried to stop the rackets, and women in public confronted them heroically, like Charlotte Cordays facing the guillotine. "Take us to jail, if you dare. If you dare! We are going to dance. See if you dare stop us!"

The policemen at last began to laugh, and doubtless in that they acted very wisely. No one in the world could say who people with courage to dance on the public street at 3 in the morning might prove to be. So many famous men and women have been wandering, incognito, about Paris since the war ended!

Among my acquaintances in Paris is a young Persian Prince who owns I don't know how many elephants and how many troupes of dancing girls back home in Persia. We were sitting in a grillroom one afternoon watching the whirling feet of all kinds of dancers, some of them from the most respectable families in Paris, and others from the more notorious resorts of Montmartre. So far as dancing went, I assure my reader that it was impossible to tell the two classes apart. However, the Prince, like myself, never dances. And I remember the look of disdain the proud Oriental cast upon some of the "celebrated" men in the room.

"Men to dance," he exclaimed disgustedly, "men to dance. What that is, men to dance? Western people all crazy * * * don't know what logic or philosophy is. Men to dance! In Orient, women to dance, men to look, seated, women to move like snakes * * * pleasant for men to look. Paris, men to dance, women to dance, men to get tired, women to get tired. No, no! In Orient, women to get tired, men to look and dance good for something."

"You were a real Parisian when you could wipe the gloom off the face of an undertaker by a 'mot,' a pun or a jest."

IS FORTUNE A HANDICAP?

De Forest and Gary Discuss Rockefeller's Regret That He Need Not "Make His Own Way"

IS it a handicap to be born rich? Has the boy who is compelled to make his own way in life a better chance than the heir to millions? Do happiness and attainment reward the boy disciplined in the hard school of ambition, while they flee beyond the grasp of those born amid abundance?

In giving a million dollars to the Hoover fund for the relief of the hungry children of Middle Europe, John D. Rockefeller Jr. voiced his answer to these questions a few days ago. Somewhat wistfully he said of his father: "He had to make his own way in the world and I have never known what that was."

That was a New World expression, an American idea. Americans chiefly, the offspring of pioneers, hold to such a belief. For hundreds of years adventurers have sojourned in new lands in order to amass wealth and to found families. The open lands of an unsettled continent first, and later the amazing development of industry, commerce and finance, have made the adventures possible and successful. In the old countries opportunity was much less open, at least until the rise of industry and the changes of the war created a new social order. But always in the United States, in Canada, in Latin America, in Australasia, in the colonies generally, the elect pioneers have found golden roads to fortune. Consequently the belief in the superiority of man and woman who from small beginnings attain conspicuous success is one of our traditions.

The United States is, however, a changing land. We are approaching the conditions of stability which once characterized Europe. So we have the question, Is it now true that the man who in a sense makes his own way in the world encounters rich experiences which the man born to fortune cannot hope to share?

Mr. de Forest's Opinion.

In the effort to get light on this question so intricately interwoven with our civilization, a number of men have been consulted. One of the first was Robert W. de Forest. Mr. de Forest has had a rare opportunity for observation. Much of his time is given to philanthropic and public service. He is President of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He is a member of the Board of the Russell Sage Foundation. He has been associated with the direction of a large number of enterprises which in various ways were directed toward the public good. He has come in contact with the men and women who, in addition to possessing fortunes, have been moved by considerations of public welfare.

"It is a close question," he said. "Many men without education or early opportunities have become distinguished in this country. Whether or not they would have been more useful had they enjoyed early advantages, it is, of course, impossible to say. On the other hand, men who have had every opportunity in youth have amounted to nothing. I should say that it is the individual who counts and that there is no rule.

"Men like the late James J. Hill have been able to build personal success and at the same time render great public service. Mr. Hill began without education, but he educated himself and played a very great rôle in the building of the Northwest. Who can say that he would have been more useful had his youth been spent under different conditions? Many great railway executives—I think it is particularly true of railway men—have begun from humble origins and reached places of great power and usefulness.

"On the other hand, take the case of young Mr. Rockefeller himself. Mr. Rockefeller has made a remarkable place for himself. It can fairly be said that no great funds have been administered more wisely in the public interest than have the Rockefeller gifts. Would they have been better managed had Mr. Rockefeller been compelled to 'make his own way'?

Need of an Education.

"While there is no rule, one thing, I think, is certain. It would be going back on everything we believe of American life if we held that education was of no assistance to personal success and public service. We cannot say that the self-made man without education is in a better way than the man who has been well trained. There is, for example, Mr. Root. When he began life he had to teach school to support himself. But he had a college education. I think it will be admitted that Mr. Root has been a very useful public citizen. He is a self-made man in that he achieved his own success, but he had the original advantage of sound training.

"Then there was Theodore Roosevelt. He had wealth, education, the chance for a life of indolence and ease if he wanted such a career. He had every advantage, and he used all in the largest public way. I cannot see that poverty or the lack of education would have aided him or increased his worth to the country. Similarly Senator Lodge was one of those who in youth might have chosen a useless career of idleness. But he preferred public service, and he found his material advantages no handicap in the race.

"In contrast with these are many who have been lost to public service because they were too comfortable in youth. The temptations of wealth, or ease, of luxury, are very real. Some of those who have succumbed to a soft environment might have led more useful lives had they been compelled by necessity to struggle for their own advancement. Because they had opportunities ready made, they seemed to lose the greater opportunities which lay ahead.

"If you can combine education and sufficient means to utilize it, as is illustrated in the career of the young Mr. Rockefeller, you have the greatest potentiality for public service. The temptation to leisure is not so great in this country as it is abroad. It is respectable to work here. It is not respectable not to work. Men who do not work are somewhat despised both by men and women. I do not mean that the work must be money-making. There are other things. Men with money can devote themselves to public service. It has been held that there is beyond the necessity of work have a greater opportunity for service in Great Britain than here. The tradition of public work is more pronounced there. Yet, when you recall men such as Theodore Roosevelt, it is perfectly plain that the rich man is not handicapped if he aspires to be of use to his country."

"Spirit of the Individual."

Ex-Judge Elbert H. Gary, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the United States Steel Corporation, when asked to give his opinion of Mr. Rockefeller's remark, replied that wealth or lack of wealth at birth had nothing to do with the success of a man's career. It was, in his opinion, the personal equation that was of importance.

"The problems or conditions which the rich boy has to fight are no less great than those the poor boy encounters," said Judge Gary. "They are different, it is true, but they are obstacles in the path of his success, nevertheless. The rich man's son may have to fight overindulgence to his wishes; the poor man's son must fight indifference to his. The point of the matter is that the spirit of the individual is called forth to battle in both instances. It is the spirit in both instances that wins. It is the desire to prove that he can rise above the things that bind others of his own kind. Wealth has nothing to do with it, in so far as greatness is concerned. It is important only from the point of view of the service it can render.

"From the point of service, it is most certainly not the rich man's son who is handicapped. Everything being equal but the wealth of the family into which two boys are born, it is the boy with a million dollars who can render the most service to mankind. The opportunities to make changes and improvements are offered him; he has the means to tackle these opportunities.

"Provided he has the inclination and the desire to take his place in the sun, there is nothing to prevent him from doing the things that his less fortunate brother dreams about.

Poor Boy's Handicaps.

"Dreaming about things is about all the poor boy can do until he has pushed himself beyond the pale of want. Once he has arrived there he can begin making those dreams realities. But if you speak in terms of handicaps it is he who has suffered, and not the rich boy. He has had to stint his eyes to the visions of endeavor which the other could realize when they came.

"You speak of the rich man's son losing out in the adventure of life by not having to fight any obstacles. Fighting obstacles is not finding adventure. The boy who is born in a lowly family doesn't think them such. They are just a part of his existence; they are his life.

EDWARD LORD, CENTENARIAN

EDWARD LORD, father of Chester S. Lord of this city, will celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of his birth on March 29. His children, grandchildren and six great-grandchildren are arranging an all-day party at the house of his daughter, Mrs. C. P. W. Merritt Clifton Springs, N. Y., where the centenarian makes his home.

Mr. Lord is hale and hearty and could easily pass for a man in the late seventies. He comes from distinguished pioneer stock. The ancestor seven generations back, Thomas Lord, came from England in 1635 and settled in Connecticut at Oly Lyme. The father of Edward Lord was one of the pioneer settlers of Western New York, coming to this State in 1800 and purchasing a large farm near Ithaca. It was on this farm that Edward Lord was born, March 29, 1821.

While still on the farm he prepared for entrance to Ithaca Academy, where he fitted himself for Williams College. After taking the full course at Williams, he was graduated in 1843. Today he is the oldest living alumnus. For years he attended the reunions of the alumni as the sole representative of the class of 1843. For the past year or so, however, he has not been able to stand the strain of these annual meetings and has only written letters of greeting. In a letter to his son, Chester S. Lord, formerly managing editor of The Sun, he says he cannot be on hand at commencement next June. The son will take his place on that occasion.

After his graduation from Williams Mr. Lord entered Auburn Theological Seminary and later received a pastorate in Romulus, N. Y., but in a few years was transferred to Fulton, N. Y. Thence he went to Adams and next to the Dutch Reformed Church at Metuchen, N. J. Meanwhile he had married Miss Mary Jane Sanders of Williamstown, a direct descendant of Roger Williams. In the Civil War Mr. Lord enlisted as chaplain of the 110th New York Volunteer Infantry Regiment. His grandfather had fought in the Revolutionary War and his father had held a commission as Lieutenant Colonel in the War of 1812. In his two years' service as chaplain he was sent to Louisiana in the campaign of General N. P. Banks and was at the siege of Port Hudson on the Mississippi River. In the recent world war his grandson, Edward Merritt, lost his life.

"You suggested that I need not fret," Mr. Lord says in his latest letter to the son in New York. "That word has been the subject of much thought, and long ago I decided not to use the word, nor to do the thing itself, and I cannot remember doing any fretting in a long time. There is not a inviting in that word, nothing that can be admired nor pleasing. The prickly shrubbery produce flowers, but no beauty can spring from fretting. Nothing but ugliness—nor can there be any eloquence in its use. It creates disgust and contempt; never enjoyment or pleasure. It belongs to the class of words like anger, hatred and cruelty."

He is still deeply interested in current events and discusses the affairs of the world with keen intelligence. He is versed on the League of Nations, the Volstead act and the Blue Laws.

"The Blue Laws are old friends of his," said Chester S. Lord, in speaking of his father's tastes. "He grew up with them. We did, too, for that matter. For years it was a heinous offense to leave our own yard on the Sabbath, to dance, or to invite the presence of the devil by playing cards. In the last few years, though, he has "thawed out" a bit, and regards some of the modern pastimes with more leniency than formerly.

"For years his favorite sports were hunting and fishing. We have taken fishing trips together in the Summer many and many a time. Last April, when he was in his ninety-ninth year, he and I went fishing together, and he handled his rod with the old skill. His knees are getting rheumatic now, so that is one diversion that he will have to forego. He has to make some concessions to old age, you know."

At Clifton Springs on March 29 Chester S. Lord and his sons will join Mrs. Anna Colinda Lord Merritt, Royal M. Merritt of Clifton Springs, Mrs. Geraldine Merritt Macmillan of Boston, and Mrs. Anna Merritt Brock, also of Boston, for the birthday party.

ARE POISON

Difficulty of Detecting Wood Alcohol in "Booze" Except Through Chemical Tests

By T. R. YBARRA.

AGAIN enter the Alcohol Twins, Ethyl and Methyl. As a few people knew before Prohibition, and most citizens have learned since, Ethyl's real name is Grain Alcohol and Methyl's is Wood Alcohol. Ethyl is the only rightful basis of that which is affectionately, waggishly or contemptuously known as Booze, likewise Hootch. Unfortunately, Methyl continually bobs up in the booze-hootch sold legally before June 30, 1919, and in that which (rumor has it) is being illegally sold nowadays.

Ethyl, though potent in nature and capable of producing scandalous effects, is a straightforward old thing, whereas Methyl is bad, very bad. As a Broadway philosopher puts it: "The wages of Ethyl is hangover, but the wages of Methyl is death." Hence the burning question now agitating the land from Atlantic to Pacific: How can one tell Ethyl from Methyl?

Thousands of worthy citizens are tossing at night on mussed-up pillows, feverishly repeating to themselves those, or words to the same effect. Moreover, they are moving heaven and earth to answer the question or get experts to answer it for them. Local chemists are being rung up on the phone by men living over and for cellars, who have suddenly become imbued with the idea that there is a great gulf between the labels on their bottles and the contents thereof. Agonised persons buttonhole professors of chemistry, slip into their hands hip flasks, and say "Doc, if I drink this, do I get drunk, blind or dead? Tell me! Money no object."

Ethyl or Methyl? That is the question!

Complicated Chemical Tests.

There are many ways of finding out whether that which purports to be a beverage having as its basis grain or ethyl alcohol also contains wood or methyl alcohol, a small dose of which is a deadly poison. Tests are being constantly applied by chemists in the employ of the United States Government to determine the exact nature of alcoholic drinks seized by revenue officers, as well as by other chemists who make the tests either for their own information or in response to queries from owners of private stocks of liquor. Let it be stated at once that the tests which really make it possible to distinguish Ethyl from Methyl are hardly such as layman can attempt with any hope of success. They involve the use of complicated apparatus, strange liquids with awful names, and weird chemical formulas such as nobody but a thoroughly qualified chemist can venture to beard in their lair.

If you don't believe this, take note of one of the commonest formulas for detecting the presence of wood alcohol in whisky or similar beverages. It is contained in the "Pharmacopoeia of the United States of America, Ninth Annual Revision," and is employed frequently by Government chemists in analysing samples of the hootch now to be found in this land. Here it is:

"Dilute the alcohol with distilled water until it contains about 10 per cent. by volume of ethyl alcohol. Transfer five mils (a mil is a cubic centimeter) of the dilute alcohol to a test tube, add to it two mils of a potassium permanganate solution (made by dissolving 3 gm. of potassium permanganate in 100 mils of distilled water) and 0.3 mil of sulphuric acid, and allow the mixture to stand for five minutes. Now dissolve the precipitate of manganese dioxide by the addition of sulphurous acid, drop by drop, with agitation, then add one mil of sulphurous acid T. S. and mix them. After standing for ten minutes, a colorless liquid results"—(that is, if no methyl or wood alcohol is present. If the sample contains wood or methyl alcohol, the color of the resulting liquid will be reddish).

Hardly a thing, that, to be undertaken blithely by an average citizen whose only qualification for considering himself a chemist is a cellarful of hootch!

Watching the Experiment.

The experiment outlined above is a most impressive thing to see. I saw it. It took about two hours, with intermissions due to the fact that the Officiating Hootch-analyst suddenly discovered that he hadn't ready to his hand some indispensable little thing like permanganate of potassium, and had to send out and get some at the nearest permanganatery, or whatever you call the place where they sell that interesting fluid, assuming it's a fluid.

When all was ready I was taken into a room containing, at a conservative estimate, ninety labels marked "Poison," 7,000 glass bottles and twenty-nine terrific smells. I was allowed to hold in my hand a half portion of sulphuric acid. I was informed that two liquids which turned red and yellow before my eyes were, respectively—I forget what. This surprised me mightily, because I thought they were Chianti and Sauterne. Also, I was formally introduced to a Bunsen burner.

Then the officiating chemist, who had been heating a wire over a flame, suddenly dipped it into a bit of hootch, causing an infernal sizzling therein. I was requested to look at the hootch. Around it was a red ring. Also a new smell now entered the room.

"That hootch has wood alcohol in it!" the officiating chemist informed me, pointing an accusing finger at the red ring.

"Does nothing else happen?" I asked, disappointed. I had had a hazy idea that there would be a sort of chemical version of a third degree investigation, at the conclusion of which a still, small voice would issue from the depth of the sample of hootch whispering:

"Further subterfuge is useless. I confess! My name ain't Ethyl at all. It's muh-muh-Methyl! Officer, do your duty."

But there was no more. The deed was done.

"Did you think that liquid would leap out of the test tube and the sign 'Wood Alcohol' appear across it in illuminated letters?" asked the officiating chemist scathingly. I was properly humbled.

Here are some other tests, described by a chemist in not too chemical language:

"The first procedure is to separate the alcohol from the solid ingredients of the liquid to be examined. This is done by distillation, collecting more particularly the first portions of the distillate for the test. Where the amount of wood alcohol is relatively small the test may be made more delicate by redistillation, in this way increasing the concentration of the alcohols present, particularly the wood alcohol.

"The quickest and under most circumstances an entirely satisfactory test is that which depends on the oxidation of the wood alcohol to formaldehyde and the subsequent identification of the formaldehyde by a suitable color reaction.

"One way to conduct this test is as follows: Dilute the distillate to be tested so that the total alcoholic strength will be about 10 per cent. and place about an inch and a half in a test tube surrounded by cold water; heat a copper wire spiral to redness and plunge into the liquid, repeating this operation four or five times; boil till free from odor of acetaldehyde. After cooling, add a drop of ½ per cent. resorcinol solution, and into the test tube, containing about half an inch of concentrated sulphuric acid, pour the solution to be tested, so that it will overlay the acid. If wood alcohol was present in appreciable amount in the original solution, a rose-red ring will appear at the junction of the acid and solution within a few minutes.

"This is a relatively quick method, but other substances than wood alcohol may give the reaction; however, such other substances are not ordinarily present in commercial spirits. When the distillation is conducted three times, as small an amount as 1-10 per cent. of wood alcohol may be detected. It is a valuable negative test, since in the absence of the reaction wood alcohol may be excluded.

"A modification of the test just described is to conduct the procedure as above to the point where it has been oxidized with a copper wire and then to test for formaldehyde by the hydrochloric acid and ferric chloride test.

"In this test the oxidized solution is added to an equal amount of milk in a porcelain dish and to the mixture is added an equal quantity of commercial hydrochloric acid containing two cubic centimeters of 10 per cent. ferric chloride per liter. The contents of the casserole are heated slowly over a free flame nearly to boiling, giving the casserole a rotary motion. The development of a violet coloration indicates the presence of formaldehyde, which, if the reagents have been pure, was developed by the oxidation of wood alcohol in the treatment with the copper spiral. In the absence of wood alcohol the final solution merely turns brown."

What a Layman Can Do.

The experiments described are comparatively simple compared to several others used to detect the presence of wood alcohol in liquids where it should not be found under any circumstances. Some of these tests involve the use of things with names compared to which "permanganate of potassium" is simple. Also, they take longer. In short, as has been observed, testing drinks to see if they have wood alcohol in them is seldom work for a layman.

Some things, however, he can do without the aid of an officiating chemist which may show him that bottles of stuff which he fondly supposed were fine whisky or superfine brandy are in reality wood alcohol or thereabout. For instance, crude wood alcohol has a distinct odor when not freed from impurities; so, if a person familiarizes himself with this odor and detects it in a beverage, he should not touch a drop of it. But a great deal of the wood alcohol in liquor has been purified to such an extent that its characteristic odor is imperceptible, and this test will fail in many cases. Unscrupulous users of wood alcohol as an adulterant of drinks have learned how to eliminate or disguise the wood alcohol taste almost completely.

An effective way of detecting the presence of crude wood alcohol is to put a sample of the drink to be analyzed in a dish and apply a Bunsen burner. This will bring out strongly the characteristic odor of wood or methyl alcohol if any is present in the sample.

Those experts who are "in the know" ceaselessly point out how much wood alcohol is to be found in the beverages made during the last few years, and especially in the sort now being offered surreptitiously for sale in this supposedly "dry" country. The wood alcohol is not only used by unscrupulous persons who do not care whether they kill or blind others, but also by many who innocently employ it under the impression that it is ethyl or grain alcohol and hence possessed of no poisonous qualities.

A Movement for Safety.

A movement is on foot to limit the use of the word "alcohol" to ethyl alcohol, and have wood alcohol called simply "methyl," in order to check in some degree the confusion between the two which has been responsible for some of the ravages of the poisonous variety. Methyl or wood alcohol is not only cheaper than ethyl alcohol, but may be obtained at any paint shop, since it is extensively used in the making of paints and varnishes.

The importance of the chemical tests to determine whether wood alcohol exists where it is not supposed to be cannot be exaggerated, when it is borne in mind that in the months before prohibition the scramble to lay in stocks of liquor made unscrupulous criminals resort to unheard-of lengths in the adulteration of alcoholic beverages with wood alcohol and the concoction of beverages under false names, which were in reality merely compounds in which deadly wood alcohol was present in quantities sufficient to poison anybody partaking of them even lightly. And what was true of the months before prohibition is even truer of much of what is now being illegally sold under the guise of alcoholic liquor. Never before did a label on a bottle mean so little. The tricks adopted to palm off on the thirsty "fake" beverages masquerading under well-known names are legion.

One of the newest, recently discovered, is the filling of so-called non-refillable bottles of well-known brands of liquor by means of a wire heated to white heat and run through the bottom of such bottles. Into the perforation thus made inferior liquor, often containing a high percentage of wood alcohol, is forced, and, when the bottle is full, liquid glass is poured into the perforation, which, when it hardens, leaves the perforation invisible, unless it is subjected to the minutest scrutiny. As a result of this trick, owners of private stocks are exposing themselves and their friends to death and blindness when they drink liquors which they confidently supposed at the time of acquiring them were the purest and best brands of whisky or brandy or gin.

Dr. Hunt's Warning.

Following upon research work probably more extensive than that of any other authority on chemistry in this country, and including a great number of tests to determine whether or not wood alcohol was present in beverages supposedly free from it, Dr. Reid Hunt, head of the Department of Pharmacology of the Harvard Medical School, formerly of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, and for some time chief of the Department of Pharmacology of the United States Health Service, recently issued a solemn warning of the dangerous prevalence of wood alcohol in liquors.

"Wood alcohol," writes Dr. Hunt, "has become known as the 'American poison,' on account of the frequency with which cases of poisoning have been traced to it in the United States. Despite this fact, there is still a lack of appreciation of its dangers and of an understanding of its nature. The misconception of the dangers of wood alcohol evidently exists not only among those who drink or sell alcoholic beverages of unknown origin, but also to those who prepare drinks containing wood alcohol for sale and perhaps also to those who sell wood alcohol to the latter class. No other explanation of the recent accidents is thinkable; for, however sordid the motives and however reckless of human life the manufacturers of spurious 'alcoholic' beverages may be, it is unreasonable to suppose that any one would knowingly incur the legal and other responsibilities for such a wholesale slaughter as has recently taken place.

"Many consumers, and perhaps some of those who sell such drinks, seem to think that wood alcohol has such characteristic properties that its presence can be readily detected by the odor or taste. On the other hand, those who make such drinks know that this is not the case, but either believe that the poisonous action has been exaggerated or that the chances of detection are relatively slight.

"Moreover, testimony was offered in a court a number of years ago to the effect that the manufacturers of flavoring extracts had been approached by dealers in wood alcohol and urged to make their preparations with it. The fact that already at that time the bottles bore the label 'Poison' was explained as a ruse to prevent the Government from placing an internal revenue tax upon wood alcohol.

"It cannot be too strongly emphasized that there is not a single property of wood alcohol, except its poisonous effects, by which any one but a chemist can distinguish between purified wood and ordinary or 'grain' alcohol. The appearance, odor and taste of the two are so strikingly alike that even chemists who have had much experience with them are unable by these properties to distinguish between them with certainty. The difficulty is, of course, greatly increased when essences, flavors or coloring matters are added, as is the case in the spurious drinks now being offered for sale. Not only can the consumer, however great his familiarity with alcoholic beverages may be, not trust his own judgment in this matter, but he cannot trust the judgment of an experienced bar or saloon keeper.

No Doubt of the Danger.

"It is inconceivable that any ordinarily intelligent person can now be in doubt on this subject, in view of the hundreds of cases of death and blindness resulting from its use. Twenty years ago, when such cases first began to be reported, there was some reason for a little uncertainty on this subject, not only on the part of the public, but of chemists and of those physicians who were not familiar with certain pharmacological experiments on dogs. The odor, taste and other properties of pure wood alcohol are so like those of ordinary alcohol that chemists were inclined to attribute the bad effects from the former to the presence of impurities in the commercial samples. But none of the impurities in the latter are as poisonous or cause the same effects as the absolutely pure wood alcohol itself.

"Pharmacologists, moreover, from experiments on dogs, had, years before, shown that the action of wood alcohol upon the animal organism is fundamentally different from that of ordinary alcohol. This difference may be briefly summarized. When ordinary alcohol is taken into the body it is rapidly converted into water and carbonic acid gas, which are harmless substances, always present in the body, and any excess of which is promptly eliminated by the kidneys and lungs. Wood alcohol, on the other hand, instead of being changed into harmless substances which are easily eliminated, remains in the body as such for a considerable time and is then slowly converted into another poison—formic acid—the acid which is found in ants. These poisons, and perhaps a third formed from the wood alcohol—formaldehyde—attack the brain and other organs and cause death or blindness.

"Poisonousness is an inherent quality of wood alcohol. It is as impossible to prepare non-poisonous wood alcohol as it is to prepare non-poisonous prussic acid.

"Individuals vary considerably in their susceptibility to wood alcohol: some die or become blind from amounts which seem to do no harm to others. This is true, however, of all poisons. Death or blindness has resulted from two teaspoonfuls and from one or two tablespoonfuls of the poison. Sixty to seventy-five of those taking four ounces—that is, a quarter of a pint or half a 'glassful'—have died or become permanently blind. That wood alcohol is properly placed in the list of deadly poisons is evident from the fact that the mortality from arsenic poisoning is only 50 to 75 per cent. and that from bichloride of mercury even less. Of a group of 136 men who drank a mixture of wood and grain alcohol, all but thirty-two died or became blind.

"At the present time, when the manufacture and sale of genuine alcoholic beverages is illegal, the only safe course to pursue is to refrain from buying, drinking or dealing in anything purporting to be such a beverage."

ON SINN FEIN

Trail of Americans Intriguing With Germany Uncovered in British White Book

THE first copy of the Sinn Fein White Book, containing secret documents intended to show the connection between the Irish revolutionary movement and the German Imperial Government, which was published by the British Government on Jan. 6 last, has just been received in the United States. Extracts from the documents were published as cable dispatches in THE TIMES on Jan. 9, 10 and 11. The publication itself gives many additional facts. It traces the relationship of the Irish revolutionary leaders with the German Foreign Office, with Count von Bernstorff, former German Ambassador to the United States, and it throws fresh light upon the anti-British activities of many Irish Americans. John Devoy, Justice Cohalan and a number of other Americans appear prominently in the narrative.

Many of the facts which the White Book recites were previously known in part. Some of them were published in May, 1918, by the British Government. The recent publication, however, supplies data which were previously omitted. In the preface it is stated that the White Book "reveals (so far as seems at present expedient) in greater detail certain of the documents proving the intrigues between Sinn Fein and Germany." It is said further that after the rise of the Bolshevist power the Irish revolutionaries looked to Russia for assistance against England. By far the most interesting sections to this country deal, however, with the part played by Americans in the Irish revolutionary campaign. This part appears to have been extremely important. Intelligence was conveyed, it is asserted, both through the dispatches of the German Embassy at Washington and by means of a special messenger service developed by American sympathizers with Irish independence. In cases American citizens were sought as message bearers because of the immunity which their citizenship would afford them.

The first documents deal with Sir Roger Casement, who was in the United States at the time of the outbreak of the World War. Casement, it is said, "was in close touch with the Irish revolutionary associations there." John Devoy, ex-Fenian, was the most prominent leader of these associations. He was during the war the chief agent in America for communication between Germany and Sinn Fein, and was described by von Skal, one of Count von Bernstorff's staff at Washington, as their 'confidential agent.' He was known as 'Sean Fear,' (the Old Man) among the Irish revolutionaries. Justice Cohalan, it appears, also was a connecting link between the German Foreign Office and the Irish revolutionary forces. As early as Nov. 6, 1914, a message was sent to Justice Cohalan by Sir Roger Casement through the German Embassy at Washington. In this message Casement asked that a native born American citizen be sent to Ireland as a messenger and that a priest be sent to Germany through the aid of the German legation at Christiania.

For Carrying on Sabotage.

Other messages concerning the purchase of arms for Ireland and the agitation for an Indian revolution were sent. On Dec. 13, 1914, the German Embassy at Washington informed the Foreign Office in Berlin that Mr. Devoy of The Gaelic American had paid $1,000, which was to be given to Sir Roger Casement. The message also informed Casement that the "Rev. John T. Nicholson of Philadelphia is now on sick leave and is ready to start." Of Mr. Nicholson the message said: "Is in every way qualified. Speaks Irish well. Has visited Germany and is in full sympathy with the work we want done. Born in Ireland, but is an American citizen." John Devoy was informed through the German Embassy's message of Jan. 23, 1915, that "support of Larkin entails loss of sympathy in many quarters in Ireland." Larkin was the Irish labor leader who for a long time was active in this country. He is now serving a sentence for violation of one of the laws enacted when the United States entered the war against the German Empire.

"J. MacGarrity, Philadelphia," was another to whom instructions were sent from Berlin in January, 1915.

An interesting message was sent on Jan. 26, 1916, to the military attaché at the German Embassy in Washington. It read:

"You can obtain particulars as to persons suitable for carrying on sabotage in the United States and Canada from the following persons:

"Joseph MacGarrity, Philadelphia, Pa.; John P. Keating, Michigan Avenue, Chicago; Jeremiah O'Leary, 18 Park Row, New York. One and two are absolutely reliable but not always discreet. These persons are indicated by Sir Roger Casement. In the United States sabotage can be carried out in every kind of factory for supplying munitions of war. Railway embankments and bridges must not be touched. Embassy must in no circumstances be compromised. Similar precautions must be taken in regard to Irish pro-German propaganda." This message was signed by a representative of the General Staff.

The formation of the "Friends of Irish Freedom" shortly before the Easter rebellion, 1916, is a link in the chain of evidence put forth in the White Book. On Feb. 10, 1916, the following message is said to have been sent embodying a report from John Devoy, who is called "Confidential Agent":

"Unanimous opinion that action cannot be postponed much longer. Delay disadvantageous to us. We can now put up an effective fight. Our enemies cannot allow us much more time. The arrest of our leaders would hamper us severely. Initiative on our part is necessary. The Irish regiments which are in sympathy with us are being replaced by English regiments.

"We have therefore decided to begin action on Easter Sunday. Unless entirely new circumstances arise we must have your arms and munitions in Limerick between Good Friday and Easter Sunday. We expect German help immediately after beginning action. We might be compelled to begin earlier."

Rising on Easter Sunday.

Bernstorff informed Berlin on Feb. 13, 1916, that "the Irish leader, John Devoy, informs me that rising is to begin in Ireland on Easter Sunday. Please send arms to (arrive at) Limerick, west coast of Ireland, between Good Friday and Easter Saturday. To put it off longer is impossible. Let me know if help may be expected from Germany." Bernstorff received a message on March 4 stating that an Irish pilot boat should await trawlers at dusk in the evening between April 20 and April 22 at the entrance of Tralee Bay. Two or three steam trawlers could thus land 20,000 rifles and 10 machine guns, it was stated. The pilot boat at short intervals was to show two green lights close to each other. Bernstorff was asked to ascertain whether Devoy could make the necessary arrangements in Ireland.

Further messages indicated that the arrangements had been made. A wire dated on March 13 and signed by Devoy and Bernstorff asked that the signal word "Finn" be wirelessed to indicate that the vessels were coming, and that the term "Bran" be used if some mishap had occurred. The raiding of the office of Wolf von Igel at 60 Wall Street in April, 1916, made available data concerning the intrigues between the German Embassy and the Irish revolutionists. Von Igel, it appeared, was especially concerned with the German-Irish affairs. On April 18 the German Embassy sent a message to the Foreign Office at Berlin, in which the following occurs:

"Cohalan requests me to send on the following:

"'The Irish revolt can only succeed if assisted by Germany, otherwise England will be able to crush it, although after a severe struggle. Assistance is required. There would be an air raid on England and a naval attack timed to coincide with the rising, followed by a landing of troops and munitions and also of some officers, perhaps from an airship. It might then be possible to close the Irish harbors against England, set up bases for submarines and cut off food export to England. A successful rising may decide the war.'"

The Eastern rebellion, however, failed. On June 12 Bernstorff sent forward a message in part as follows:

"We are completely cut off from communication with our friends in Ireland. All we can get now is that information brought by returning American citizens who had passed before the rebellion and they can only bring stories about the fighting. None of them have seen any man who could give them inside information. All such men have either been shot or imprisoned, except a few who are in hiding. It is said that some of these have escaped and are on their way to America."

Against Peace Conference.

How the plans for German reinforcement of the Irish rebellion went astray was related in a letter from John Devoy to Lawrence De Lacey, dated July 20, 1916. The original was found on De Lacey's premises in San Francisco. In part Devoy said:

"The substance of it all is that the betrayal of the information about the shipload of arms by Wilson's men enabled the English to catch the vessel. There is no doubt at all about this. They got in the raid on von Igel's office a note of mine—the transcript of a message received in cipher from Dublin and wirelessed to Berlin the day before 17th April—a request not to land arms 'before the night of Sunday, 23d.' That was its meaning, but it used the word 'Goods.' It was at once given to the English and they sent out their patrol boats and cruisers, the ship. Then they sent troops to Tralee and reinforced Limerick. This would not have spoiled the rising, because if they were in the fields other shiploads would have been sent. Casement did the rest. He landed on Friday and sent a message to McNeill to stop it; that it was hopeless, &c. McNeill got it on Saturday and issued his countermand."

Devoy continued to argue that Casey

"TAX TUBERCULOSIS," WASTING DISEASE OF EXEMPTED SECURITIES

IN the Harvard Law Review Harry Hubbard pays a passing compliment to the remark in THE TIMES of Feb. 21, 1920, that it requires an argument to show that the income from the bonds of States, counties, cities and other minor civil divisions is not taxable by the United States under the Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution giving the power to tax incomes "from whatever source derived." Language could not be plainer. There is obvious weakness in the argument to the contrary so far as it rests upon the Constitution before it was amended, and upon decisions subject to the same disqualification. What is the use of an amendment of the Constitution if it alters nothing, and if lawyers and Judges can put another meaning on language which is plain to the man in the street, who has difficulty in following the lawyers' explanations?

How is it possible to argue now that the power to tax incomes "from whatever source derived" does not include fourteen billions of income from a most conspicuous source when, before the amendment was adopted, Governor Hughes opposed it because it meant that those fourteen billions were taxable under it? While the votes of the people were being solicited Governor Hughes in a message to the Legislature said: "The comprehensive words 'from whatever source derived,' if taken in their natural sense, would include not only incomes from ordinary real or personal property, but also incomes from State and municipal securities. * * * We cannot suppose that Congress will not seek to tax incomes derived from [such] securities. It has repeatedly endeavored to lay such taxes, and its efforts have been defeated only by implied constitutional restrictions, which this amendment threatens to destroy."

The case in favor of the right to tax that fourteen billions is even stronger than the case of the plain language to that effect against constitutional restrictions, which were only implied before the amendment. Mr. Hubbard makes that clear by giving the history of the amendment in the Journal of the American Bar Association. In its original form it read: "It shall no longer be necessary to apportion 'direct' taxes on incomes among the several States in proportion to population." In its amended and final form the word "direct" was dropped, and the phrase "from whatever source derived" was inserted. There is meaning in both changes, and Mr. Hubbard, for the first time, makes it clear why the changes were made. He does not argue the point, but introduces testimony.

Senator Nelson was a member of the Judiciary Committee when the Senate adopted the amendments on his initiative. Senator Nelson authorizes Mr. Hubbard to publish a letter in which the Senator says: "The words 'from whatever source derived' were inserted in the amendment in the Senate at my instance, and on my insistence. I have been very sorry to see that the Supreme Court in its decision has utterly ignored the phrase; in fact, treated the amendment as though this phrase were not a part of it." Senator Nelson adds that Senator Aldrich, Chairman of the Finance Committee and Senate leader, concurred with him in discussion of the amendment before it was adopted.

A Strange Perversion.

While the amendment was pending the Senate refused to adopt a resolution of inquiry into the point raised by Governor Hughes, but adopted the amendment with the phrase in question after an argument by Senator Brown supporting it, because it meant what Governor Hughes said it would be taken to mean. It should be ratified, because, Senator Brown argued, under that interpretation all incomes would be treated alike. No exemptions would be allowed, and no exceptions would be permitted, save as Congress might and should exempt all incomes up to a certain amount. "There is a homely and rugged notion in the average American heart that the burdens of Government should rest on everybody instead of somebody."

What a strange perversion of the intention of the Senate and the people it is that the intention to tax all incomes should be interpreted into an intention to protect against taxation fourteen billions of securities owned in particular by the too rich! Anu what irony is there in the fact that the overtaxation of the too rich has been so extreme that it has reacted against the interests of those poorer, who must be overtaxed, because the taxes on the rich for their relief are so extreme as to be non-productive, and contrary to the general interest by diverting investment from productive enterprise into tax-exempt securities!

It remains to explain why "direct" was dropped from the Sixteenth Amendment. In Civil War times income taxes were considered indirect taxes and therefore not within the prohibition of Congress to levy direct taxes without apportionment according to population. In 1894 Congress passed an income tax according to Civil War precedents, but in 1895 the Supreme Court decided in the Pollock case that income taxes were direct taxes, and therefore within the prohibition of Congress before the Sixteenth Amendment.

An income tax apportioned according to population would result in such monstrous economic consequences that it would not be available as a Federal resource without a constitutional amendment to enable direct taxes to be levied without apportionment. In 1909 Congress avoided the point by passing the corporation excise tax, which is an income tax in fact, but not in form. It was not until 1913, eighteen years after the Pollock case, that the Sixteenth Amendment gave Congress the power to levy income taxes without apportionment, thus avoiding the economic absurdity of requiring an income tax to be levied according to population.

It is hard to imagine how the war could have been financed without the income tax. Now it is becoming difficult to see how peace can be financed without the resources which the Sixteenth Amendment was designed—is it not proved?—to make available to the national taxing power, and which the lawyers are seeking to exempt from taxation by weasel words which the plain man cannot follow, although he sees clearly that the argument is more for the benefit of the too rich and the overtaxed than for himself.

The argument is that the bonds of minor civil divisions stand on an equality with the salaries of the officials of such civil divisions, and that neither bonds nor salaries can be taxed because both are instruments of sovereignty. Sovereignties do not tax each other, and the law recognizes that principle in the relations between the nation and the States, including the subdivisions of the States.

Salary Exemption Dropped.

It is true that the laws of 1913, 1916 and 1917 carried exemptions for the salaries of the President and Federal Judges. But that rather weakens the case for constitutional exemption, for if that were undoubted it would be mere surplusage to enact it. The exemption was dropped in the law of 1918, and Federal salaries are now taxable by the nation. Salaries paid by States and inferior political subdivisions of States were also specifically exempt in the earlier laws, and they are not now specifically taxed. Senator Simmons in reporting the law said the law was amended "so as to require that any * * * salaries paid be subject to the income tax, leaving the constitutional question as to the authority of Congress to tax certain salaries to be settled by the courts in any case in which the question may be raised." There has been no such case. It is difficult to imagine that any one will appeal from an exemption, and State, &c., salaries are exempt by regulation of the Treasury (T. D. 2843) on opinion of the Attorney General. The propriety of the Treasury regulation may be challenged, for the question is not administrative, but constitutional, suitable only for decision by the courts, as Senator Simmons said above.

There is a case (Evans vs. Gore, June 1, 1920) in which the Supreme Court was called upon to decide a levy on the salaries of Federal Judges and the President himself. This case is the reliance of those who argue against the national taxation of the income from local bonds. Salaries and interest coupons are equally income, but there is a constitutional prohibition against the diminution of Federal salaries which does not exist as regards income from local bonds. It is obviously necessary that Federal officials should be protected against duress by those who have power over their pay.

The lawyers say that the popular mandate to tax income "from whatever source derived" does not mean what it seems to, because in the Federal salaries case the opinion was rendered that the Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution "does not extend the taxing power to new or excepted subjects, but merely removes all occasion otherwise existing for an apportionment among the States of taxes laid on income, whether derived from one source or another."

Unfortunately for taxpayers, counsel for the Government gave away the case for the taxation of incomes as completely as the Treasury gave away the case for the taxation of salaries. This appears from the opinion of Justice Van Devanter: "Counsel for the Government say it is not, in view of the recent decisions, contended that this amendment rendered anything taxable as income that was not taxable before." Then why was the amendment passed? And why was language used to give complete power of taxation, only to be explained away in a case not fully argued? And is it not desirable that a decision of the court should be sought in a case not complicated with the other constitutional restriction upon the diminution of Judges' salaries? The opinion quoted above was not a decision, because it was not necessary to the settlement of the salary case. Therefore it was a mere judicial remark aside, not certainly law, although quoted as such Taxes and Universality.

Judges are not protected against the taxation of their salaries from any tenderness for them, but for reasons of public policy. Also, the proposal to lay a Federal tax on incomes "from whatever source derived" rests on public considerations of the highest policy and not on any argument from the desirability of catching wealthy taxdodgers.

Taxes are meritorious largely in proportion to their universality. Forty billions of exempt securities approach in total one-sixth of the estimated national wealth. As there are other billions exempt from local taxes, it is clear that too large a proportion of taxable resources is suffering from a curable disease. Representative McFadden thinks that half of the taxpayers dodge their rightful burden, which means that the other half pays double. But the first remedy to be applied should be an equitable tax system to replace taxes that disappoint the Treasury and have become odious to the people.

It is exasperating to pay taxes to supply salary funds which are tax exempt in the hands of those who receive them and do not always give an equivalent in services. It is almost insulting to ask citizens of New York to pay taxes at present rates when there are $2,221,550,817 of exempt realty in the hands of private owners in New York City alone, beside exemptions of large sums owned by the nation and the State. The evil has become so obvious that the nation stopped making issues of its own bonds completely exempt with the first issue, and now taxes later issues in various degrees. The nation also now taxes the salaries it pays, yet it exempts hundreds of millions of State salaries by a mere casual ruling of officials. It is worse that the plain popular mandate

IS FORTUNE A HANDICAP?

"Let me make myself clear on that. When you speak' about a man in moderate circumstances who has been born of a poor family, you do not say of him that he has had an adventuresome life. You say that he was born of lowly parents and is now a clerk or a foreman or lawyer. He may have suffered, he may have gone without the necessities of life, and certainly without its comforts and luxuries; he may owe to himself the only bit of education he has, but nobody speaks of his adventures. It is only when his efforts are crowned with unusual success that the halo of adventure is placed around the expenditures of his early youth.

"If the truth were told, it is the rich boy with unusual endowments who has the real adventures of life, if such you wish to call them. Getting out of the rut of things in which people about you are living and possessing the means to see clearly and widely and wherever you wish—what greater adventure can there be than that? John D. Rockefeller Jr. did not have to follow the footsteps that his father was going; he might have become a waster and a blighter. But he didn't. Why? Because he chose to follow the course that his father had charted. That course was adventure in itself. It was adventure because it was different from the course that hundreds and thousands of young men of wealthy parents are following. It was adventure because it was lit up by a definite aim and a desire to create and to be of service. It was certainly adventure because it empowers him today to do the things that others of his own kind have not been able to do.

Judge Gary's Own Case.

"I should not have felt handicapped if I had been born with a legacy of a million dollars. I do not know that I should have gone any further than I have gone today, but most certainly I should not have stayed behind in the race. I suppose some people would call my life one of adventure. I never thought it so. There are certain things I wanted and I went after them. I should have wanted them just as badly if I had been born in more happy circumstances. I probably should have got them.

"I was born on a farm about twenty-five miles out of Chicago. My father was not a poor man, but he never had an overabundance of money. We had enough to eat of good plain food, never anything fancy. That wasn't adventure. I can't say I always had enough to wear, for I never had an overcoat until I was 16 or 17 years old. My father, coming from New England, believed in hardships for the young. He was never cruel, but always severe. That wasn't adventure.

"I went to school when I wanted to and worked on the farm when I wanted to. My father let us decide which we could do. We consequently did one thing half the time and the other the rest of the time. There was nothing thrilling in that. When I was 18 years old I went to college. While there I got the opportunity to teach school, which I did for six or seven months. After that I took a position as clerk in my uncle's law office. I stayed with him a year and a half, after which I went through law school. All of this was neither breath-taking nor hair-raising. It is the same sort of thing that other boys have done.

"The point I am trying to make is that there was nothing in my life which might by the longest stretch of the imagination be called adventure. There were no unsurmountable difficulties which I conquered with a smiling visage and a glowing brow. I did the things I set out to do—and nothing else. I did them as they came along and as the opportunities offered themselves.

"I was no genius. I wasn't talented in any special way. There was just one thing that guided me all the time—the same thing that guides men in other circumstances who succeed. I had made up my mind to show the people with whom I lived and worked that I was different; that I wanted things they didn't want or didn't think about; that I would not stay in the place where Providence had put me. Some people call it ambition, some call it purpose, some call it tenacity. Anyway, it was there. There is nothing different or strange in that; there is nothing adventuresome in that. It is not the gift of the poor man only: it is something that Mr. Rockefeller can possess in equal degree with the son of the farmer.

Incentive to Succeed.

"There was another thing in my life that acted as an incentive to my work. It was the desire to work my way to a point where I could feel that I and my family would never be in want. I will admit that a rich man's son could never be impelled by that motive. That could only be born in a home where the silver spoon was lacking in the mouth of the new-born child. And yet, I repeat that was not the thing that made me go ahead. I married when I was 23; when I was about 30 I had enough money to insure my family comparative comfort for the rest of their lives. The 'want' motive was gone. But the other was not.

"The great incentive, the thing that makes for adventure, is the desire to succeed. And success means doing something better than your fellow-beings, giving more service, finer service, if you will. There is no monopoly on that feeling. It knows no caste.

"Take the case of John D. Rockefeller Sr. and John D. Rockefeller Jr. I know them both. Do you think that one hundred years from now the world will regard the first greater than the second? I think not. The second was born with opportunities to be of great service; he has used those opportunities to good advantage; he has adventured with them. His father had opportunities of a different kind. Both have done unusual work with the material that Providence gave them. Mr. Rockefeller Jr. is still a young man. His adventures are just beginning. There is no telling where they will lead him, provided his vision remains clear.

"Take, again, the Morgans. The late J. Pierpont Morgan was born a rich man. That was no handicap to him. He never thought it one. The figure he cut in the financial history of the world was much more important than the one his father had cut. The same will, I think, be true of the present Mr. Morgan, who was born with a good deal more wealth than his father had at the start. That didn't bar him from any adventures. That didn't prevent him from using his brain and his vision to do the things he dreamed about. If I am not mistaken, he will outshine his father in the same manner as his father did his own.

"The important thing to remember is that it is vision that counts. Money is no handicap to that. I should not have resented being born with a million dollars. I rather think I should have liked it. It would have opened the door of opportunity for service sooner."

One Who Gave Up Riches.

The feeling which Mr. Rockefeller expressed is, however, characteristic of a small number of sensitive individuals. Young men and young women tend, perhaps in increasing numbers, to attempt to escape the easy success made possible by their family connection. One such young man, the son of a family engaged in exporting business, recounted his revolt.

"I simply could not endure being shoved along from promotion to promotion merely because of my family," he said. "There was no adventure in a life which promised commercial advancement, regardless of whether I was fit or not. Finally I chucked the whole business and told my family that I was going to make my own way, and that I wanted no interference. I got another job on my own account, not so good a job as I had. Finally I found that it was not business that interested me.

"After wandering about for a few years, I took up economic and social investigation. I am not rich, as my family intended me to be and as my brothers are, but I am living my own life in my own way. I am getting more satisfaction than I would have had had I gone on along the lines they charted. My family could not understand my choice for years. They thought I was 'no account.' My sister had a similar revolt. She took up art and afterward married an artist. Family disapprobation was even stronger in her case, but after a while it disappeared."

This man, now a writer well known in England and in the United States, is a typical though extreme case of the common desire to "make one's own way." It is the desire for adventure, for real adventure, where everything is at stake, rather than for the domesticated and safe expeditions of those whose comfort is too well foreseen and whose path is too well paved.

Prospecting for Adventure.

A famous mining engineer who has himself prospected in various parts of the world observed that the pioneers who "made their own way" in his field had experiences unrivaled by those whose way was made easy. He said:

"The man who makes his own way in mining confronts a combination of circumstances which cannot be approached. I know young men who go out into the wild country on the theory that thus they can get a taste of the pioneer life and undergo hardships. I do not think it can be done. You see, the real prospector has everything at stake, while the prosperous adventurer risks only his comfort and his physical safety.

"The real prospector making his own way has only his own small accumulations or the stake which some friend has lent him. He often goes out knowing that on the success of his efforts rests not only his own prosperity but also the money of his friend and his own honor. He faces physical dangers. They are often hard enough in themselves. Added to them in the case of the prospector is the mental anxiety. The man knows that he must conquer the wilderness. He must find his claim. He must be in a position to repay the loan made to him. If he fails he loses all, even the respect of his friends.

"The true pioneer thus is under a dual strain. The physical effort and the worrying lest the enterprise be futile bite into his being and stamp the character of the man. I do not think that artificial effort ever reproduces such a situation, and, therefore, I do not think that the man who does not make his own way can ever understand fully the pioneer. He has not suffered as much and he will not understand as much."

A number of young millionaires were approached for an opinion on the subject. For the most part they were reticent. One of them thought a minute and said: "Well, I am willing to take chances with a fortune. Do you know any one who wouldn't be?" The honest answer would be, "Not many."

One young man has recently made the headlines by refusing to receive the fortune bequeathed to him, but after all he was highly exceptional. Most of them take what they find. The lazy follow their own bent, but those of the better sort use their unusual opportunities to achieve unusual ends. Some of the most interesting experiments being made in this country are the work of men of the second and third generations of those who have possessed great wealth. The "man who makes his own way" is frequently so engrossed in himself that he has no time or energy to give thought to others. But the man whose material success has been given to him is free for other activities.

In various industrial plants experiments are being made by men who have inherited large businesses. Many of the significant adventures in the field of industrial relations are attributable to such leaders. From the standpoint of money their careers have been ready made, but from the more interesting standpoint of public service they have to begin humbly, as Theodore Roosevelt started. There may be as much romance in building a career of public service as in founding a fortune. The young Viscount Astor, for example, is interested in creating better health conditions in England. His efforts are centred on housing reform, on measures designed to protect the lives and the health of infants, on a wide range of projects designed to lift the level of well-being of the people of England. That is an adventure of first-rate interest and importance.

In a degree not surpassed by the efforts of his conspicuous progenitors, he finds it necessary to make his own way. The fact that his goal lies in the amelioration of social conditions instead of in gathering a new fortune does not detract from the interest or the difficulty of the work. Rather it calls for higher qualities, qualities which count for more in history. The rich man's son often has a greater opportunity if he desires to make his own way than had his father. It is a different way, but not less full of adventure.

SCHOOL MEDICAL SERVICE.

MEDICAL treatment for school children is provided in some form in 300 out of 318 schools in England and Wales, according to the annual report of the chief medical officer of the Board of Education issued recently. In fifty-three schools provision is made for treatment of all defects. Particular attention is given by the medical department of the Board of Education to the prevention of diseases and to questions of nutrition, cleanliness, fresh air, warmth and exercise.

Recent legislation has added considerably to the scope of the school medical service as regards children about to leave school to enter employment and children under the age of 14 who are employed.

Secretary Colby's Summary of the Government's Attitude Toward Russian Rulers

By WILLIAM H. CRAWFORD.

IN an interview given to a reporter of La Nacion, one of South America's leading newspapers, Secretary Bainbridge Colby discussed recently in Buenos Aires the attitude hitherto taken by the United States on the subject of the recognition of Soviet Russia. He was asked if there had been any change in the American position and replied that there had been no modification of it. The statement follows:

"The attitude of the United States was fully set forth in a formal note addressed to the Italian Ambassador at Washington on Aug. 10 last, and there has been no departure whatever from the position is outlined.

"The United States has thus far refused to accord political recognition to the Moscow Government, and my opinion is that no recognition will be given Russia until it works its way to a Government, regardless of its internal structure or form, which recognizes the duties of a modern State toward other nations.

"The present Government is sustained by the most wanton cruelty and rigorous oppression and frankly founded upon duplicity as a principle. It does not profess to be in any degree a representative Government. It is an avowed and unblushing tyranny—an inconsiderable minority sustained by force and relying upon indiscriminate oppression as the means of self-perpetuation.

"We have taken the position that we are unable to extend formal recognition to the present rulers of Russia, or admit their right to hold that position. This decision has not been taken because we conceive that we have any right to dictate, or even suggest, to Russia how she shall order her political and economic life. It does not represent a judgment rendered against a particular political polity or form of government. Accepting in its full and most literate meaning President Wilson's declaration that the right of self-perpetuation belongs to all nations, no matter how small or how great, it would never occur to us to challenge the right of the Russian people to have any kind of Government they may choose, so long as they respect our rights. We had not the slightest thought of discriminating against Sweden when that country chose for itself a Socialist Government. Our refusal to recognize the Soviet Government was due in the first place to the fact that it was itself the denial of self-determination to the Russian people, being a rule by men who violently usurped power and destroyed the democratic organ of the Russian people's Government. Even more, however, it was due to the fact that the Soviet authorities announced that they would not be bound in any manner by their most solemn pledges, freely entered into, and the further fact that by their actions, in the case of several friendly nations, they have lived up to that announcement. There can be no useful and harmonious co-operation toward the end of placing civilization upon a sound basis with such men.

"We have taken the position that we cannot regard as final certain dispositions of important territorial rights, and acknowledge the full independent sovereignty of a number of States carved out of what was the Russian Empire. Here, again, we have not departed from that principle of the right of nations to self-determination which was laid down by President Wilson and is concurred in by both the great political parties of our country. Our position is that changes and adjustments are vitally important to Russia, as well as to the nationalities concerned, must—for reasons of political expediency no less than of fundamental morality—be the outcome of mutual discussion and agreement. Russia must be protected in her interests. She is entitled to her day in court. We feel that we are in morals bound to exercise, in common with other nations, a certain voluntary trusteeship for a disabled friend and former ally. In no sense can our policy be rightly interpreted as an adverse verdict upon the claims of independence put forward by certain Russian factions.

"I have said that this broad principle is valid also for reasons of political expediency. It seems fairly obvious that any arrangements made whereby large and important areas are alienated from Russia without her consent, in pursuance of agreements entered into without her knowledge or participation, will be challenged by Russia in the[n] near future when she has recovered her strength. Thus, again, will the whole world be brought face to face with the perils of war. It is for this reason, mainly, that we have opposed the forcible dismemberment of Russia.

"There is another point which, as it seems to me, is worthy of much greater attention at the hands of the world's statesmen than it has received. I refer to the manner in which Bolshevism in Russia has been strengthened by the sense of outrage felt by many Russian thinkers. The attempt to dismember Russia has caused a great many of her sons and daughters to stifle their hatred of Bolshevism and to accept it as the defender of the national patrimony. The bruised national sentiments of the Russian people have caused the very best minds in Russia to lend their support to the Bolsheviki, because they believed the latter to be, for the time being, the one aggressive force seeking to prevent the dismemberment of their fatherland."

NEW LIGHT ON SINN FEIN

ment was largely responsible for the failure, saying at one place, "We knew he would meddle in his honest but visionary way to such an extent as to spoil things, but we did not dream that he would ruin everything, as he has done."

After the failure of the Easter rebellion the relationship between Count von Bernstorff and the Irish revolutionaries in this country was continued. On Aug. 28, 1916, Bernstorff reported to Berlin, and in the course of his dispatch he said:

"Von Igel and von Skal also keep up relations with the Indians and Irish, respectively, since von Papen left. * * * Von Skal maintains relations with the Irish, for which he has special qualifications in his many relationships in those circles and has their complete confidence."

About this time Germany was asked to aid in obtaining the appointment of Assistant Bishop Daniel Cohalan as Bishop of Cork. Cohalan was described as a cousin of Judge Cohalan. It was added: "It would have a great moral effect in Ireland if Cohalan were chosen."

The way of the intrigue was not always easy. On Oct. 24, 1916, Bernstorff asked that Reserve Captain Boehm, a German secret agent, be directed to stop writing letters to Irishmen in the United States. The German Ambassador added: "His letters only endanger their undertakings, especially as they are sometimes addressed to the wrong people."

On Dec. 19, 1916, the German Embassy at Washington reported that "our Irish friends here are strongly against the proposed peace conference, which they regard as a desertion of Ireland on the part of Germany." The same month the German Foreign Office informed Count von Bernstorff of a new proposed attempt to land munitions in Ireland. The landing was scheduled to take place in February or March, 1917. On Jan. 22, 1917, Bernstorff asked for permission to expend up to $50,000 to "influence Congress through the organization you know which can perhaps prevent war."

After the United States declared war and Bernstorff returned to Germany efforts were made to establish relationship with the Sinn Fein leaders through South American headquarters and "through the Irish in the U. S. A., the object of the communications being the support of the Sinn Fein with arms and munitions for a rising against England." This was communicated in a message of the Foreign Office to the German Embassy at Madrid on Aug. 21, 1917.

The Irish revolutionists during 1917 began to look to Russia for assistance. This effort was not allowed, apparently, to develop.

The White Book contains an appendix in which a memorandum on the Irish army organization is published.

MUSIC IN STEEL PLANT.

IN the great Bethlehem Steel Works they stop all the machinery at a certain hour every day, says the American Boy. And then what happens?

The thousands of men and women who work there listen to music. It's very costly to stop all the machinery in a big factory and do a thing like that. But Charles M. Schwab, who arranged it, says the gain of it offsets the loss. Melodies get the workers' minds off their work—dust out their brains—and they go back refreshed mentally and physically. They work better, they produce more, they are happier.

We suppose you're wondering, "Does Schwab take his own medicine?" He does. Every week without fail he takes off several hours to listen to music. He's a practical man, so he must have his reasons. Here they are: "I don't want to become a dried-up business man. I want to keep alive the fountains of sentiment. If sentiment should ever go out of my life I would feel that I had ceased to exist as a human being, that I had become a machine. Music helps me to keep human."

"TAX TUBERCULOSIS"

to tax local bonds is twisted and prostituted into exemption by a legalistic jiu in favor of vested interests. They had plain notice of their position under the new constitutional amendment, and have had ample time for reinvestment. Truly, the base of our tax system Federal and local, is afflicted with what Representative McFadden calls "tax tuberculosis," or wasting disease.

There is a plain reason why this subject is worthy of growing attention and is likely to receive it. Only a few years ago Federal taxes were hardly appreciable and local taxes were not burdensome. Now all tax rates are troublesome, and in many cases where the owner is extended or embarrassed they become confiscatory. This stimulates both the search for new sources of taxation and for methods of evasion or exemption for the favored few.

Dangerous Tendencies.

It is time to check both tendencies, for there is no telling the extremes to which either or both may run. Already in the politicians' dictionary may be found the definition: "Taxes—fines levied on the rich and paid by the poor." With cities and States going into business on the North Dakota scale and with all their enterprises exempt in the form of State or local bonds, the nation soon may find nothing taxable but the incomes of wage earners, the millionaires having invested in tax-proof bonds. If a halt is ever to be called, there never can be a better time than now, before the exemption evil has had time to dig in on retreat before such disclosures as those of Mr. Hubbard and such arguments as those of ex-Governor Hughes.

Supporting them, and leading the assault on the tax dodgers, were Secretary Glass and Treasury tax experts. In his recent annual report Secretary Houston renewed Secretary Glass's recommendation that income from such bonds should be included for the purpose of calculating the surtax payment.

After them came Representative McFadden, Chairman of the House Banking Committee, with his proposal to levy an income tax on future issues only, leaving outstanding issues in their impregnable privilege.

There is something to be said on both sides of the policy (as apart from the law) of a Federal tax on all incomes and all salaries "from whatever source derived." The practice of the States is variable. New York taxes incomes from bonds of other States. That is right enough, even though theoretically States are sovereignties and grant tax comity to each other. The States are equal to each other, but the various States are not equal with the nation. They have surrendered portions of their sovereignty to the nation for mutual advantage, and for the purpose of creating a nation which is the common superior of all of them. The States have given the nation duties, and are bound to give the means to support the duties. The States individually assumed certain war costs, but the nation lacked the power to assess the States. For war purposes, at least, and for the purposes of paying war debt, a tax on income from State bonds and salaries would be reasonable. It would be justified if only for the purpose of giving the national bonds priority in the money market. At present the State exemption is the broader, and the Liberty bonds are at a disadvantage.

To tax all incomes and salaries is to do justice and equality. But an exemption is a practical subsidy and stimulus to borrowing which already is excessive. In 1920 there was issued $750,000,000 of bonds whose exemption is competitive with the Liberty bonds, and in 1919 the issue was larger. Large amounts of these public bonds were for purposes competitive with private bonds, although the private bonds are on properties which pay taxes. It hardly needs saying that a national tax on local bond income should not be at a higher rate than on other incomes; there should be discrimination neither in favor nor against them and the tax on income should not be at the rate of the general property tax on capital, as it used to be in New York. That was practically confiscation, and the tax could not be collected.

It is recognized that there is danger in putting this resource at the command of the taxpayers. It would remove the pressure upon them to improve the bad laws which they have passed, and it would give them more money to spend where already they have too much, considering the use they make of it. Still, so long as we are to have an income tax, it should be a tax on incomes "from whatever source derived." That means much more than an income tax on exempt bonds and salaries. Those who contend that the Sixteenth Amendment conferred no new power of taxation forget that the Pollock case applied the requirement of apportionment to incomes from real and personal property also. To apportion a tax on property among the States or its proceeds according to population would be an injustice as glaring as to tax some incomes and exempt others. Some States have populations several times as large as others, and the share of each taxpayer would be proportionately larger or smaller, as the case might be. There is no other way to apportion an income tax than according to income, and a tax which is not apportioned is not levied. The Sixteenth Amendment means just what it says, and it ought to mean it. If it means something else, who is to say what it means, and where will the interpretation end, and when, and after what embarrassment for the courts whose prestige has already suffered from its conflicting interpretations of the Sherman Anti-Trust law?

E. A. R.

A MILLIONAIRE MACHINIST.

ON a hot day last Summer an express train between Philadelphia and New York came to a jolting halt, says the current issue of Nation's Business. The passengers first joked, then grumbled, then grew impatient. A big man, white-haired, but youthful in motion, climbed down from a chair car and marched up to the engine, which was the centre of a ring of passengers.

"What's wrong?" he asked.

In effect, the engineer said that the engine had quit and he didn't know what the several things was the matter with it.

The big man peeled off his coat and waistcoat and rolled up his shirt sleeves. Then he sort of disappeared in the interior of the unwilling engine and the ring of watching passengers grew.

Half an hour later he emerged with a smudged face and grimy hands and said, "She's all right now," put coat and waistcoat over his arm and walked back to his chair car, wiping his hands on a handful of waste he'd picked up in the cab.

She was all right and the man who made her all right was Samuel Matthews Vauclain, President of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, and a real boss of their 20,000 workmen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SENATE DOMINATION

Washington, Jan. 24, 1921.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial of Jan. 12 on the growing dominance of the Senate was most timely. That body, in the so-to-speak instinctive process of self-assertion, finds itself most often in opposition to the Executive. Surely there must be something inherent in the nature of these two important agencies of our Government and their relations to each other which produces mutual antagonism—a subject worthy of special study. This apparently chronic antagonism has been forced upon public attention as never before by the fight upon the President, for which the Covenant of the League of Nations furnished a pretext.

Discussion of the subject has begun and remedies have been offered. Mr. Bryan has proposed that the two-thirds vote limitation be removed and the Senate be left to pass upon treaties by a simple majority. Governor McCall has proposed that the function of ratifying treaties be transferred to the House of Representatives. Professor Irving Fisher urged, as one of three weighty reasons for opposing Harding, the necessity of checking the Senate oligarchy.

S. W. McCall, former Governor of Massachusetts and twenty years in Congress, is well qualified to handle the subject. The structure of the Senate and its special prerogatives he shows were the result of compromises in the Constitutional Convention, and were denounced at the time by Franklin and others as in conflict with democratic principles. The long term of Senators, their extraordinary powers in reference to treaties and appointments, the disposition of men in power to grasp more power, and the tendency of a live club to magnify its activities have led to steady encroachment by the Senate upon the rights of both the President and House of Representatives and have made possible the growth of a Senatorial clique into a ruling oligarchy. This term, which has been so much used in partisan debate, is applied by Mr. McCall calmly, after careful analysis, to describe the thing which really exists.

Their prerogatives give Senators the whip hand. Only by subservience to them and by conciliating them with patronage can a President obtain their consent to his treaties and appointments; while the people's representatives individually and collectively must defer to them in matters of policy and appropriations. Conspicuously have they nullified the Constitution in its article that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives." Yet Mr. McCall limits his recommendation to the subject of treaties: the power of ratification should be taken from the Senate and be given to the House, in which is the more immediate voice of the people.

But why stop there? If an amendment reforming the Senate can ever be obtained, and I believe the Senate will bring such an amendment upon itself in a few years, the subject ought to be dealt with thoroughly. The right of consent to treaties should be committed to the Congress, to be exercised by joint resolution; the confirmation of appointments should be abolished; the powers over revenue bills, usurped by the Senate under the guise of amendment, should be ended. The Executive should be freed from Senatorial domination and be solely responsible for Federal officers and employes; the House of Representatives should be protected in its prerogative as to revenue legislation. Indeed, publicists will conclude, on a study of the subject, that this provision should extend to appropriation bills as well; that is, the House should have and be held to the responsibility of both raising and expending the people's money, the Senate being given only an advisory power in the matter.

The British have been obliged to deal thus with their House of Lords. Shall we be less democratic?

JUNIUS JUNIOR.

THE CUBAN ELECTION

HAVANA, Jan. 4, 1921.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter of Adolfo Franco, published in your issue of Dec. 12, contains such gross misstatements, all of them tending to discredit President Menocal of Cuba and his attitude with respect to the recent election in the eyes of the American people, that I cannot refrain from refuting them and presenting real facts.

On the second day of November last a delegation of prominent Liberals, headed by General Pino Guerra, Chairman of the National Assembly of the Liberal Party, and General Ernesto Asbert, former Governor of Havana Province, called on President Menocal to congratulate him on the impartiality he had displayed during the election, and, incidentally, paid an eloquent compliment to the officers and privates of the army who had mounted guard at the doors of the electoral colleges on said occasion, in accordance with instructions of the Central Electoral Board, as provided in General Enoch Crowder's new electoral code. Formerly these soldiers took orders from the Secretary of the Interior.

Up to Nov. 10, when the Executive Committee of the Liberal Party issued a statement protesting against the way in which the Administration of General Menocal had conducted the election, mentioned in Señor Franco's letter, the Liberals, or rather the Miguelista Liberals—for the many thousand Liberals that remained loyal to Dr. Zayas constituted such a powerful factor that they achieved the success at the polls of the latter—firmly believed and boastingly claimed that their Presidential candidate, General José Miguel Gómes, had been elected.

When the returns officially announced by the Central Electoral Board—not, as formerly, by the Department of the Interior, a circumstance this of great significance, since it means the non-intervention of the Government in the counting and sanctioning of the votes—convinced them of their failure, they suddenly, and without realizing the inconsistency of their change of front, resorted to their traditional method of attributing the defeat to the military coercion and official fraud.

This is worthy of special attention. In Havana Province, where three-fourths of the armed forces of the republic were quartered on Nov. 1, because only one-fourth of it was requisitioned by the Central Electoral Board for the custody of the electoral colleges, the Miguelistas won, their candidate for Governor, Barreras, being re-elected.

What about military coercion in this case? In the City of Havana, the seat of the Government, Marcelino Días de Villegas, Miguelista candidate for Mayor, defeated his opponent, Gustavo Pino, President Menocal's personal friend and designated by him as the National League's nominee for said office. Did the Government's influence prevail in this case? Needless to say, as the Liberals carried Havana Province and city, they declared that the election had been legally conducted in both.

In the other five provinces of the island, Pinar del Río, Matanzas, Santa Clara, Camagüey and Oriente, the Popular-Conservative coalition, or the National League, triumphed, but by the narrowest of margins, for, as the reports of the electoral colleges to the provincial electoral boards and to the municipal electoral boards, respectively, proved beyond a doubt, all of the legally registered Liberal voters, except in Camagüey, cast their votes on Nov. 1.

The voting in Camagüey Province deserves a special paragraph, for it is the birthplace of General José Martí, son and namesake of our greatest revolutionary figure, known as the "Apostle of Cuban Liberty." General Martí is the Secretary of War, and ran for Congress from said province. He was defeated by a large majority by his Liberal adversary. Does it not seem strange that in an election where, according to the Miguelistas, the army was the "be all and end all," so far as electoral success was concerned, the man who had the army under his direct command should not have succeeded in imposing his candidacy? It stands to reason that if he, with the President's tacit approval, had made the slightest effort to such end his victory would have been a foregone conclusion.

Señor Franco states in his letter that the aforesaid Liberal protest against the attitude of General Menocal and his administration on Nov 1 was first handed to the representative of the Associated Press in Havana, with a view of having it published in the United States in order to enlighten (?) American public opinion, and that it was not published as requested.

We fear that Señor Franco is mistaken. Mr. Downing, Havana representative of the Associated Press, a veteran and up-to-date newspaper man, would not have allowed "good copy," such as the protest in question, to remain unexploited.

I want to explain that the singing of African songs on election day by hordes of negroes was not a feature peculiar to manifestations on behalf of Dr. Alfredo Zayas, the official candidate. Rough subnormal elements figure in the ranks of both of our political parties, elements that, swayed by low instincts, often contribute to our elections scandalous carnivals unless checked by the authorities.

Since Señor Franco alludes to this disagreeable subject, it is a pity that he should fail to mention that the authorities forbade the singing of "Congas" and the "Chambelons," in response to the protest of the decent inhabitants of Havana.

If Menocal were the despotic dictator painted by his political opponents, would he not, instead of choosing Zayas as chief of the Popular-Conservative coalition, have designated one of his friends with a view to secure his election by force? If the army was to be used for coercion and the Constitution was to be violated, what need had he of forming a coalition with Dr. Zayas, who had always been his adversary?

The story of your correspondent, Miss Savage, to whom Mr. Franco refers in his letter, was correct, while his own report of our recent elections in Cuba was grossly incorrect, malicious and misleading.

JOSE HERNANDEZ GUZMAN,
Managing editor of La Lucha and La Noche.

"LITERARY DISARMAMENT."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial article of last Sunday on "The Literary Disarmament" uses some figures about book production which it might be interesting to compare with the new reports for 1920, which are just ready.

The article quoted Mr. Brentano in saying that the bookseller was confused and overburdened because he had to handle or give consideration to about 10,000 new books a year. This would certainly be more than any one man could handle and consider. It is not necessary, however, for any bookseller to give consideration to that number. The total number of new books issued in 1920 was 5,101; new editions of old books, 1,096. These 6,200 books are divided into twenty-three classes, and no one bookseller attempts to carry or even consider all of them. The largest classification is, of course, fiction, with 778 new books last year and 445 reissues of older titles. This latter figure may interest those who think that only the newest things get consideration. The next largest group is history, with 589 titles; religion, with 504 titles; sociology, with 396 titles; poetry and drama, 453 titles; children's books, 417 titles. The total list makes an interesting analysis as showing the tendency of American publishing. The previous year's total showed 4,773 new books and 969 new editions, about a 10 per cent. increase.

Probably not more than one manuscript out of ten that is prepared is finally put into book form, so that a very heavy "disarmament" takes place under the natural course of events without planning a more drastic cutting of the list. Those who point to an enormous wastage in paper in books that should not be issued might remember that books use up but a small fraction of the paper that goes to printing, magazines use ten times the amount of all books. It should also be remembered that, just as there are books that we might have got along without, there are plays we may not have needed, songs that were just as well unsung, pictures that were better left unpainted. In the field of the creative arts there are bound to be mistakes, and our age is not going to prove itself different from those that have preceded it in this respect.

OPPOSITION TO THE SALES TAX

ARTHUR A. BALLANTINE.

In an article in THE TIMES of Jan. 18, Robert R. Reed maintained that the objections to a general sales or turnover tax do not apply to the "merchants gross sales tax," advocated by many business organizations. Objections to the general sales tax, which I summarized in an article in THE TIMES of Jan. 9, are that the tax is inequitable in that all sales are treated alike notwithstanding vast differences in the character of the sales transactions; that if the tax cannot be shifted by the merchant or manufacturer it becomes a levy upon his gross income which is discriminatory and may be very burdensome; that if largely shifted to the ultimate consumer it may be against sound social policy as a tax according to needs instead of according to ability to pay; that to make a tax turn upon the fact of a "sale" would lead to undesirable changes in business practices; and that a tax levied on sales would work serious discrimination against certain small industries as contrasted with large industries. It was also pointed out that to secure from a general sales tax revenue adequate to accomplish the reduction of other taxes which is desired, it would probably be necessary to make the rate at least 2 per cent. instead of 1 per cent., and that such a tax at this rate would be a very disturbing factor in business.

These objections are not met by substituting for a general turnover tax the somewhat limited turnover tax of which Mr. Reed is an advocate. That tax, referred to as "the merchants gross sales tax," calls for "the levying on each and every business involving any sale of any commodities or merchandise produced, manufactured or purchased by the vendor for sale a tax equal to 1 per cent. of the gross sales of such business." There are to be no exemptions from its application—"We urge no exemption because the distinctive tax which we propose requires no exemption." This merchants gross sales tax then would apply to all sales, even sales later rescinded; would apply to all sales of farm produce; to sales of necessaries of life; to the sales of instruments of production; to sales at every stage of the manufacturing process; and might be paid once by the big fellow and many times by the little fellow. Its application would reach out to the little corner news stand and even to the newsboy.

There is nothing in this particular form of sales tax which avoids the cardinal objections which apply to a tax even more inclusive in its terms. The plan discussed by Mr. Satterlee, to which my letter of Jan. 9 related, was a tax of 1 per cent. on "all sales by any one to any one," certainly a very simple definition. Mr. Reed's definition is narrower—the "turnover" taxed is the purely business turnover—and Mr. Reed believes that the tax would not apply to capital transactions, to sales of real estate and securities and to casual sales generally. This limitation, if accomplished, would indeed be an improvement over the wholly inclusive sales tax, as any restriction of such a general tax is in the public interest. But in the application of the tax to the vast volume of sales still left within its scope all the general sales tax objections apply.

If it were proposed, for example, to inflict physical punishment on the innocent people of an entire State, objections to such a course would hardly be met by restricting the punishment to half of the innocent people! Under this plan those goods which are sold in various forms from one small industrial unit to another until they reach the ultimate consumer, would still be subjected to tax several times, while precisely similar goods carried from the raw materials to the ultimate consumer by a single great business would pay the tax but once. If this integrated industry argument is a "ghost," it is a ghost that will not down. The suggestion that a tax of "5 or 10 cents" on a pair of shoes paid by the small manufacturer and not paid by the big would amount to no serious discrimination between the two classes of manufacturers is not one which will appeal to those familiar with the operations of the shoe industry. That industry is one of those operating on a very large production and a very small margin of profit, and a small discriminatory addition to the gross costs might spell the difference between failure and success.

It is by no means clear that the merchants gross sales tax would exclude those capital and other transactions which Mr. Reed, unlike Mr. Satterlee, readily concedes to be entitled to exemption. Securities purchased for resale by an investment banker are, from the standpoint of the banker, essentially "commodities of merchandise." They have been held to be such by courts and are so treated under the income tax regulations. What would be the application of the tax to the output of a mine? This output is obtained by gradual exhaustion of the capital assets, yet under the definition all that output would appear to be subject to the tax. If some of the present sales taxes which are productive are to be retained, as Mr. Reed suggests, would the general tax also apply to such sales? The tax on every sale from "any one to any one" takes all the prizes for simplicity; the merchants gross sales tax is a less objectionable tax because there would be less of it, but it would not be likely to justify the hope of its advocates that it could be established without exemptions and free from serious complexities.

That the merchants gross sales tax would assist materially in bringing about the needed reform of income taxation is not yet established. Mr. Reed does not give any estimate of its yield. It is understood that the estimate adopted by Joseph S. McCoy, the Treasury Department expert, who is the leading authority on such prognostications, is about $1,100,000,000. Now the yield from existing miscellaneous taxes, largely on the process of industry and trade, is very nearly that figure. That, for the Government fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, figures are reported as follows (using millions only): Transportation and insurance $307, tobacco $184, admissions and dues $81, excise taxes on manufactures $986, and stamp taxes $94—a total of $1,564,000,000. Advocates of general sales taxation do not agree as to whether they would make a clean sweep of these taxes, substituting the proceeds from the general tax so far as necessary, or would retain them in the main and exempt in whole or in part from the new taxes transactions falling within the scope of the present taxes. Presumably the tobacco taxes would be retained, but this would still leave over $700,000,000 of the yield of existing taxes to be dealt with. If a general sales tax is established no doubt very little net additional revenue is afforded for the reduction of other taxes. If we retain the existing taxes and exempt the transactions covered by them from the general sales tax, the yield of the general tax will be reduced. On this point, as on a number of others, sales tax advocates are vague and not united. It is not surprising to find that the line of answer made to objections to one particular sales tax plan is the urging of a somewhat different plan.

The opponents of the general sales tax are hardly to be classed as "proponents, apologists or beneficiaries of existing taxes." By far the greater number of the difficulties under the present law have been due to the excess profits tax and I know of no one closely connected with the law in its genesis, its administration or its practical application to business who does not urge the abolition of the excess profits tax as an outstanding necessity of intelligent tax reform. Such persons as Dr. Thomas S. Adams, the widely experienced general adviser of the Treasury Department, are also strenuous in urging that the income tax should be moderated, particularly in the higher brackets, and that the structure and administration of the law should be improved in various concrete ways which have been worked out. Their experience renders them no less alive to the need of reforming the present tax laws and certainly not less zealous in working for such reform, but renders them also more keenly aware of the difficulties of working out satisfactory substitutes.

So far as the needed changes involve loss of necessary revenue, not to be made up through simpler and more just forms of net income or excess profits taxation, those experienced in taxation are generally inclined to rely upon the present selective sales taxes applying largely to articles which are not necessities of life and apply to these articles at one stage only, thereby avoiding discrimination as between different producers. Their difference with the general sales tax advocates is not primarily as to shifting somewhat the form or amount of the present sales taxation. They oppose the idea of general sales tax advocates that the bulk of the tax burden can wisely be transferred from incomes and profits to sales. They believe that less injustice and less harm to the social and commercial structure is caused by raising a large portion of the revenue of the Government through taxation on net income than through attempting to shift this burden to gross income taxes resting on needs rather than ability to pay. This is the position which, after most careful consideration, was taken by the Tax Committee of the National Industrial Conference Board. Dr. Adams had no hand in shaping their argument or report on the point. I became associated with the work of the committee only after that stand had been taken.

If the advocates of the general sales taxation were sound in their contention that through this method very large revenues can be raised without substantial injustice or substantial prejudice to business, they would do well to ponder upon what would be the probable result of the success in increasing as desired the revenues of the Government. Government expenditures have always shown a tendency to exceed revenues rather than to lag behind them. Particularly in these times new sources of revenue are likely to mean increased expenditure and hence increased net tax burdens. A simple and convenient means of increasing tax burdens in any form is by no means to be welcomed. Believing that the general sales tax will be obnoxious in many ways, I do not fear this particular danger, but responsibility for working an increase in Government expenditure should be upon the consciences of sincere advocates of the general sales tax.

NEW ARMENIAN POLICY.

Port Chester, N. Y., Jan. 24, 1921.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is not my purpose to enter into any controversy with my fellow-countrymen for whom I have high regard and deep sympathy and with whose estimate of the Turkish rule I agree, but merely to voice a sentiment shared by many Christians of Turkey who have, like the Armenians, suffered terribly and who, in virtue of their personal knowledge, have always disbelieved in the traditional policy of the Armenians. They are of the opinion that but for the unenlightened agitation that has been going on the problem of Eastern Turkey, like that of Syria and Mesopotamia, would have been settled and the miserable conditions of the Christians there would have been mitigated. This opinion has been expressed even by some American journalists who were in Paris during the Peace Conference.

The appeal of the Armenians to some obscure treaties of bygone days and to the utterances of certain politicians who no more know of the facts in the case than farmers from Iowa is of no avail. The well-balanced articles of our distinguished General Harbord in THE TIMES and THE World's Work have made the matter very clear to those who are willing to understand. The assertion that "the Armenian character of these States was acknowledged before the war even by the Turkish Government itself" is absurd in view of what has happened, and when it is remembered that no Moslem will ever acknowledge as belonging to a Christian people, particularly a subject people, a tract of land under the rule of the caliph. What is most urgently needed is not to appeal to this or that for the support of an antiquated theory, but to look at the affairs as they have actually developed.

For over a half century a systematic propaganda has been persistently conducted for the establishment of an Armenian rule in certain sections of Eastern Turkey, the Armenian population of which has never exceeded 25 per cent. of the total inhabitants, according to the scholarly article on Armenia in the Encyclopaedia Britannica. During these years about 1,000,000 Christians have been killed in cold blood, to say nothing of the women carried away, churches and other property destroyed. Yet Europe and America have done nothing, in spite of the high-sounding phrases of their responsible statesmen. And the latest note of President Wilson to the head of the League of Nations, relative to the subject at hand, betrays a sense of helplessness. The blame cannot be altogether placed on the great powers, for the solution of the problem as demanded is physically impossible. And no nation will make sacrifices in a cause they deem helpless and in which they have no vital interest.

These facts, together with the attitude of the French authorities toward the Armenians in Cilicia, ought to convince the most skeptical among the leaders of that race that the realization of their traditional hope is out of the question, and that it is high time that a new and workable policy be adopted.

The Joy of Big Power—without the burden of big expense

Eighty horse-power—in a Peerless Eight!

Yet, with all this in reserve, the Peerless Loafing Range consumes only half fuel-rations for city driving and all ordinary purposes.

The big, high-powered car built primarily for speed wastes fuel at fifteen miles an hour. The gentle, smooth eat, built especially for moderate running lacks power.

The Peerless Eight, with its half-rationed Loafing Range and its full-fed Sporting Range, combines the distinctive virtues of both these special types of car—a trickle of power for the city and boulevard; a torrent for hills and the open road.

Will you let us show you these contrasting power ranges in actual operation?

Reliable Automobile Information REGARDING THE Used Car Situation

There will be another shortage of automobiles this Spring.

Used Car Dealers are now buying all the cars they can handle, and will hold them for a good profit in the Spring.

We do not sell our Reconditioned Used Cars to Dealers. We sell them only the cars we could not put in first-class condition and sell to a private user at an honest price.

We do NOT buy cars for cash, speculate in or sell Used Cars for a Profit.

Our Rebuilt Car Department is conducted only as a convenience to the new car buyer who is willing to dispose of his old car at the proper depreciation, rather than sell to the average Used Car Dealer, or dicker with a private party for a big price.

All used cars offered for sale by us, therefore, cost us approximately what a Used Car Dealer pays cash, and his profit we give to you by selling at a lower price, or putting the difference in honest repairs.

BUY A TRULY RECONDITIONED CAR direct from a $100,000,000 Corporation—in business 67 years, and doing a $125,000,000 business each year, For the Price of an Ordinary Second Hand Car.

New York Bankers Frankly Say There Has Been Slump in Ethics

By FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE.

"THE most painful thing about the difficult business situation which we have just been passing through," said Herbert K. Twitchell, President of the Chemical National Bank, "is the widespread slump in business morality. The war and the business situation that followed the war seem to have left the human race on a lower ethical level than it was before. This is not only true in Europe, in South America and in other parts of the world, but it is, unfortunately, true in America.

"American business men and bankers have been rather fond of pointing with pride to the high standard of business ethics in this country, and there is no doubt that this standard has, until lately, been very high, taking the business world as a whole. But the revelations of the last few months make it necessary for us to revise our good opinion of ourselves as a class.

"Men who a few years ago would not have dreamed of repudiating a contract, or trying to wriggle out of a bad bargain by subterfuges or resorts to technicalities, are doing these things today almost unblushingly. Cancellations of orders given and accepted in good faith are made on the slightest excuse or no excuse at all. Corporations, firms and individuals whose business honor has heretofore been unsmirched have weakened under the strain rather than do what every honest man does—take the loss and stand the consequences. Bankers see every day new evidences of such weakening of the moral fibre of concerns that have long enjoyed the respect and confidence of the business world.

Only a Minority Dishonest.

"Do not misunderstand me. I am not drawing an indictment against the entire business community, but only against that proportion of it, which I am glad to believe is in the minority, that has displayed this unprecedented and unexpected weakness of character. There are plenty of honest men, splendid men in business, who would lose their last dollar rather than defraud their creditors or repudiate their obligations, and these are the men upon whom the future of American business must depend.

"I want you to read a letter I have just received from a customer in Nashville, Tenn., J. B. Morgan, President of the Morgan & Hamilton Company. Mr. Morgan's letter expresses the views of an honorable business man so excellently that I have had copies of it made and distributed to all the employes of the Chemical Bank and to our customers.

The letter to which Mr. Twitchell referred reads as follows:

"In this awful slump of values I believe I have been more concerned about the slump of morals than I have of values. Many have suffered heavy losses owing to the refusal of the contractors to accept goods for one reason or another—quite a good many by flagrant repudiations—others upon technicalities which might hold in court, while still quite outside the pale of business ethics. I hold to this belief, that a man who is honest only at the end of a lawsuit is a dishonest man.

"The basis of credit is character, and we must, all of us, adhere more rigidly than ever before to this truth and be governed accordingly.

"There is an honor in business that is the fine gold of it; that reckons with every man justly; that loves light; that regards kindness and fairness more highly than goods or prices of profits. It becomes a man more than his furnishings or his house. It speaks for him in the heart of every one. His friendships are serene and secure. His strength is like a young tree by a river.

"I like the above quotation and I cannot but believe that the business world is going to place a higher estimate on honor than ever before—money cannot buy it; it is above price; it should be more sought after than gold.

"Just the other day in commenting on the life of a man in this community I made use of the following expression: 'His word is as good as his bond; he considers every obligation as something sacred, and which is never discharged until it is discharged in full. I can truly say of him, he deals justly, loves mercy and walks uprightly.' A friend came to me afterward and remarked: 'That was high praise, but deserved—everything you said of that man is true. he and men of his character make this world a fit place to live in.' I pray God to multiply the number.

Business Honor Violated.

"Wherever business men foregather one may hear anecdote after anecdote of business houses which, on one pretext or another or on no pretext at all, have violated the code of business honor and ethics that holds honest men to their obligations to the limit of their resources. For a while these stories related chiefly to foreign concerns. One of the largest and oldest of American export houses is reported to have suffered losses estimated at from $10,000,000 to $25,000,000 through the refusal of South American concerns to accept delivery of shipments which are cmfwy day on the piers and in the warehouses of various South American ports. Rather than suffer the loss due to a falling market, the buyers have in many instances frankly welshed on their contracts; in others they have set up trivial and ridiculous claims in the expectation of dodging by legal technicalities the consequences of their own acts.

"I have in mind one instance," said Mr. Twitchell, "concerning the shipment of a cargo from the United States to Greece. The purchase was made by a Greek merchant who presented a letter of credit issued by a Greek bank and against which drafts payable on delivery of the cargo in Greece were drawn. The goods were shipped and the market went down while they were in transit. When demand was made for payment of the drafts the shipper's bank was informed that the letter of credit had been canceled by the Greek bank. Part of the goods had been delivered. The Greek bank contended that the purchaser owed it money on another transaction and refused to transmit funds on account even of the part of the shipment that was accepted.

"But, as I have said, cancellations and repudiations are not confined to the export trade. My attention was called recently to the case of a New England house that had always enjoyed the best reputation, the head of which placed a large order for cotton goods with a commission broker in New York last Spring. The broker warned this man that he was buying foolishly. Prices were beginning to soften, and it seemed probable that the same goods would sell much lower within a short time. The customer insisted on placing a large order, which was finally accepted and confirmed by all parties. When the goods were ready for shipment under the terms of the contract, this business man, seeing a heavy loss staring him in the face, for the market price of these goods had fallen off materially, went away on a fishing trip and left instructions to his treasurer to cancel the order. The only explanation he offered was that the Boston Federal Reserve Bank had put such pressure on him that he was unable to take up his contract. We took the matter up with the Federal Reserve Bank and found, as we expected, that there was no merit in this claim.

"Business men who do business in that way may succeed for a time in saving themselves from immediate loss, but in the long run they will pay, and pay heavily, for their acts. Orders are being scrutinized today with greater care than ever before, and credit, the underlying basis of which is and must always be in the long run the character of the debtor, will not be extended readily to men who have weakened under the pressure of the present strain.

Reckless Buying of Goods.

"A great deal of the trouble has arisen from the reckless ordering of goods, far in excess of the purchaser's possible needs. For a long time after the war deliveries were uncertain, and there was an insistent demand for more goods of many classes than were available for distribution.

"I was told recently an illuminating story on this point. A suburban resident remarked to a neighbor on the train that he had just ordered an automobile. 'What kind?' his friend inquired. 'I have ordered six,' was the astounding reply to his neighbor. 'I had no idea you could afford six cars,' responded his astonished friend. 'I can't, but I have ordered a car from each of six different concerns and whichever is delivered first I will accept and I'll cancel the orders for the other five.'

"That set his friend to thinking. He began to wonder how many of the orders on his own books, for he was a merchant on rather a large scale, were of the same sort. He started an investigation and found that a very large proportion of his customers, who had placed orders with him for future delivery, had given similar orders to two or three other concerns in the expectation of canceling those which were not filled first. This merchant saved himself, as the story was told to me, a great deal of trouble and possible loss as a result of his conversation with his neighbor.

"I cannot vouch for the precise accuracy of that story, but it illustrates the state of overoptimism which led many concerns away from the conservative paths of sound business and into traps from which some of them are endeavoring to escape with a whole skin. How large a proportion of the orders on manufacturers' books in the last two years were of this sort—orders placed with a mental reservation on the part of the purchaser—it is impossible to say. But I believe that the trouble in the tire industry arose largely from just such fictitious orders on the books of the automobile manufacturers. The tire makers set out to make 60,000,000 tires in 1920, basing their estimates of possible consumption on orders placed for 10,000,000 automobiles. When the canceling process was all through, these 10,000,000 automobiles had shrunk to about 2,000,000, and the tire manufacturers, many of them, found themselves with an enormous surplus of unsold goods on hand."

Business men in a score of other lines analyze their situation much as Mr. Twitchell analyzed the automobile and tire situation. The sugar market is an example. A few months ago stocks of sugar in the United States were reported to be 250,000 tons short of normal consumption demands, and importers placed orders wherever they could get them accepted. Last week it was reported that the importers had on hand 200,000 tons in excess of normal requirements, and cargoes are still coming in for which some ope must pay at the prices prevailing when the order was placed or repudiate a bargain. Cancellations in this line are already affecting American credit abroad, where the facilities for discrimination between responsible and irresponsible American concerns are not of the best. A recent issue of a commercial paper published in Java contained this significant paragraph:

"The Dutch East Indian Commercial Association has sent a cable to the Chambers of Commerce at New York and San Francisco protesting against the action of different American importers in refusing to pay for large contracts of sugar and other products, though the goods have already been delivered. Many Dutch East Indian exporters, to whom bills of exchange have been returned by the American importers, have had to book heavy losses through this curious American method of doing business, which is probably the outcome of a strong disinclination to accept the losses on contracts of a speculative character."

City Bank's Warning.

Importers have even resorted to the courts in the efforts to obtain injunctions to restrain banks from paying for such imports, even when drafts were presented drawn under irrevocable letters of credit. Several such attempts have recently been made by sugar importers. The National City Bank, in a recent publication sent to its customers, said: "The most dangerous symptom that has so far arisen in the temporary moral weakening which appears to be afflicting the business world is the attempt on the part of many buyers to escape liability for goods bought under confirmed letters of credit. These attempts have unfortunately and unthinkingly been aided by court proceedings in which judges unfamiliar with the business customs entering into the use of confirmed letters of credit have been imposed upon by unscrupulous traders seeking to avoid the responsibility they imposed upon themselves when they guessed wrong on the future trend of prices."

"It is perhaps not so much a general weakening of the moral fibre of business men under the stress of adversity as it is a disclosure of moral weaknesses that have always existed but which were not manifest in normal and prosperous times," said an officer of the Irving National Bank. "Men who were regarded as 100 per cent. honest have been found to be honest only when it was more profitable than dishonesty. One of the most important results of the stage of business which we have just passed through—for I believe we have just about come through it—is the new information that has been placed in the hands of the business community and the banks as a basis for future credits. Applications for credit will be much more closely scrutinized in the light of the applicant's past performance than has been the custom heretofore. Business men will have to satisfy their bankers and their creditors not only as their liquidity, but as to the character of their receivables."

"Business can never be on a stable footing until and unless a contract is a contract," said Mr. Twitchell. "We may be sorry for the business man who threw his ethics overboard when it came to a choice between principles and dollars, but he is going to find it difficult to do business again on any basis other than that of absolutely secured credits."

A Business Opportunity.

A business making radio apparatus which has sold readily to some of the largest dealers in the country seeks a responsible and active selling agency.

The plant of the advertiser is so equipped that it can turn out a product that stands a high test and at the same time meets all competition.

We seek this selling agency for these reasons:

1st. We want an effective sale throughout the country instead of to a limited number of large users.

2nd. Our business is young and our own efforts are best utilized in manufacturing.

3rd. We want an assurance through our selling agency that, if given the product, our own financial worries will be considerably modified.

Radio is the big thing for the next few years. There are now over 100,000 active private stations in this country.

Governor Gives Notice of Changes in the State Highway Department

NEW YORK State's Highway Department will experience this week another of those frequent changes which have been characteristic during the past decade. On Tuesday, Feb. 1, Colonel Frederick Stuart Greene, who has been Commissioner for twenty months of his five-year term, will retire and, according to the recent announcement from Albany, Governor Miller will appoint Herbert S. Sisson, head of the State Racing Department, to look after the highway activities of the State. Colonel Greene resigned voluntarily. In his letter accepting Colonel Greene's offer to resign, Governor Miller said that he had in mind the introduction of new policies in the Highway Department and wished them carried out by a man of his own selection.

Motorists and all other advocates of a comprehensive good roads policy in this State will await the definite announcement of those new policies with considerable interest. Colonel Greene, despite the difficulties encountered during the greater part of his term, due to high costs of materials and labor and the extreme difficulty of obtaining either, had mapped out a very thorough policy of highway maintenance and construction, with no taint, in so far as was possible with him, of political affiliation or favors. Only a few months ago contracts were let for considerable new work.

"This department," said Colonel Greene recently, "has plans prepared and estimates made for more than 600 miles of new highway, and, with the labor and material market considerably eased, there is every chance that we will be able to let practically every highway contract that is advertised, and there is no reason to doubt, with the present unfinished contracts, that we should complete fully 750 miles of highway and reconstruct 800 miles of worn-out pavement, provided the Legislature appropriates the necessary funds."

For the new Commissioner, the Highway Department will be left in a well-organized condition. Road costs are much higher than was the case prior to the war, and road engineers, who appreciate the extreme necessity of the best possible road building throughout the country, have consistently argued that undue economy in this respect would be one of the most detrimental things that could happen to the highway transportation progress of the nation. Where new work or reconstruction is done on the main thoroughfares, roads should be built for reasonable permanency and strong enough to withstand the increasingly heavy traffic. The question is not the building of so many miles of new highways, but the construction of such as may be done in the best manner for permanency. The new Commissioner's plans in this direction will, therefore, be watched with keen interest by all road users, and particularly by those engaged in motor transportation.

Despite the difficulties attending highway work Colonel Greene says there was more actual highway construction going on in the State of New York during 1920 than in any other three States in the Union. During that season a total of approximately 760 miles of pavement, some of which was reconstructed pavement, was completed.

"Owing to the heavy traffic on our roads and the great increase in the number of vehicles using them, and the fact that many of our roads are now fast approaching their 'elastic limit,'" says Colonel Greene, "I consider that reconstruction is more economically necessary in this State during the next two or three years than is new construction, for the reason that the pavements of many of our roads are now approaching the end of their usefulness. At present they have a certain value which would be lost unless the road is promptly reconstructed. There comes a period in the life of any pavement when the cost of patching reaches such a high mark that it ceases to be economical or even sensible to attempt to do anything with it. This patching, which is costly, is by no means permanent, and consequently does no lasting good to the road. It is merely an expedient for getting the traffic over the road during one Summer season."

Some of the main line roads in Dutchess County on the main route $5,197,000. In addition a contract was let for a bridge over Rondout Creek, costing $960,000. This is a suspension bridge and is of importance to the State, as it closes a gap on the main route between New York and Albany on the west bank of the Hudson.

The annual cost for road maintenance, which includes merely the lighter repairs, aggregates about $1,500,000 annually. The greater part of the remaining appropriation goes for reconstruction.

"The more funds we have for this we are going to save what value there is in the pavement at the present time."

It may be of interest to state that in his recent report to the Legislature Commissioner Greene called attention to the fact that in regard to reconstruction work the year 1920 was one of the best years in the history of the New York Highway Department, and that the roads were put in better condition with the gang system than they ever had been in the past when the old politically appointed patrolman system was in vogue.

SAFETY IN MOTOR LIGHTS

By H. CLIFFORD BROKAW,
Director West Side Y. M. C. A. Auto Schools

IN SPITE of the law requiring non-glare lenses, one sees many cars on the road which blind the approaching driver as well as pedestrians. Sometimes the roads are dark and rough, but the driver should realize that a glaring headlight not only endangers himself but others. It endangers himself because the driver of a car approaching is helpless and in his effort to keep on the road may very easily crowd the other fellow into the ditch or drive head-on into him. Self-preservation, therefore, requires strict heed as to how one's lights shine, if the penalty of the law does not.

The law requires suitable lenses to keep the beam of light below the eyes of the driver and pedestrian. The exact height varies in different States, but it is not far from forty-two inches from the roadway. The lens is supposed to throw the light downward to the roadway and also to each side, so that the entire roadway is illuminated. There are a number of lenses which are supposed to do this and each bears the approval of State officials. But many cars are not equipped with non-glare devices. In a busy block where many cars are parked it was recently noticed that about half a dozen out of fifty were properly equipped. Some of the cars may have used lamps of such low candle power that they would not be a menace, but the law requires an approved lens regardless of the candle power of the lamp.

An approved lens alone is not a sufficient safeguard. It is all right if the lamp is set according to directions which come with the lens. The lamp, properly set, will throw light to the reflector at such an angle that the rays will be reflected to the lenses in a proper way and there be refracted so that they illumine the roadway properly, but a slight change in the focus of the lamp may throw the light rays upward instead of downward, or throw them in a straight beam of light, which would be blinding to any one who came within its range. The purpose of the lens is to bend the rays to the proper direction, but it can only be done when the focus of the lamp is accurate. It is apparent that a car might be equipped with the proper lens and yet be dangerous, since the intent is to diffuse light so that, while the roadway is properly illumined, the rays of light do not strike the eyes of a driver approaching, or a pedestrian, and blind him.

Practically all lamps manufactured now have an adjustment for focusing the rays so that there is no excuse for any one having glaring headlights. The adjustments are more or less accessible; some have a thumb-piece on the side of the lamp by which it can be turned to any desired focus. With others the lens must be removed to make the adjustment. But it seems that there are not many drivers who know how to make, or who care enough about it, to pay any attention to the adjustments.

The authorities evidently must compel all drivers to have their lamps properly adjusted, so that the non-glare lens actually prevents a glare. This would be quite a task and it might not be a bad idea if the traffic policemen in cities were instructed how to adjust the lamps. Then when they came across a glaring headlight they could stop the car and show the driver how to overcome the glare and report the number, and if a second violation were found the offender should be sent to a Magistrate. Probably most night collisions are due to headlights which blind one of the drivers.

To turn off one headlight to overcome a glare is a decided evil. Another driver may think because there is one light that it is a motorcycle, which has the headlight directly in front, and he would be unable to judge the distance required to pass a car which had one headlight, particularly if this was on the off side.

Lamp brackets may have a bearing upon this matter. Sometimes they are bent, either from collision or because some one has tried to push the car around by pressing against the headlights. The light may be properly equipped and focused, but if the brackets are bent so that the light may be projected higher it may be a source of danger. Brackets are made much more rigid than formerly, but it is a good idea to examine them.

It is possible for any driver to test to see that his lamps are properly focused and comply with the law. Inasmuch as State laws differ, he should first become familiar with the provisions, then place the car on the level facing a wall or building to determine if the light shines in accordance with the law's requirements, testing at 50 feet and 100 feet, or whatever distance the law mentions. With each lens directions are given how to adjust the lamps. It is not a matter of simply putting the lens in the bezel, but of seeing that the lamp is properly focused if it is to work as the manufacturer intended.

While it is permitted to carry a spotlight, in practically every State it is against the law to throw its light upon the roadway even for a fraction of a minute. The spotlight may be used for reading signs, house numbers and for similar purposes, and it is mighty handy to have on a car, but when it is used for road illumination it is a menace that should not be permitted.

GOOD ROADS CONGRESS.

WITH Governor Small of Illinois and Mayor Thompson of Chicago actively interested in the Good Roads Congress to be held in Chicago from Feb. 9 to 12 and with assurances from many other States that their best representatives in highway construction will be present, it is believed by good roads advocates that the forthcoming convention will be the largest and most successful meeting of its kind ever held in this country.

The meetings will be held in the Coliseum. Among the topics to be discussed particular attention will be given to those affecting the future progress of motor transportation. At no previous time in the history of this country has the need and value of good roads been so widely recognized. Many States, especially in the East and Middle West, have mapped out more ambitious road-building programs for the next two years than has ever been done before. One of the important questions for the convention will be that of proper and reasonable weights for motor trucks in traveling over the main highways, recognizing the fact that certain limitations must be made in order to keep the present roads in condition for continuous traffic.

Governor Miller and Mayor Hylan have been asked to send three official delegates to represent the State and City of New York. H. C. Sylvester, Vice President of the National City Company, is on the program to discuss "Highway Finance"; D. C. Fenner, Chairman Motor Vehicle Conference Committee, and F. W. Fenn, Secretary of National Motor Truck Committee, both of this city, will discuss "Highway Transportation." H. S. Mattimore, Chief Engineer of the New York State Highway Department, with others, will discuss "The Importance of Drainage in Road Construction." George C. Diehl, County Engineer of Erie County, and Howard F. Beebe, Vice President of Harris, Forbes & Co., New York City, will preside at two of the sessions.

Eastern States, particularly Maine, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and Vermont, have authorized county bond issues lately for road work amounting to $42,000,000, paving the way for a vast amount of road work during the coming Spring and Summer that will afford relief for the unemployment in unskilled labor.

STATE AUTO LICENSE BILL.

SECRETARY of State Lyons recently conferred with a joint legislative committee relative to a bill calling for a State-wide operators' license, and carrying with it an appropriation of $148,000 to meet the expenses of examiners. Mr. Lyons has come out strongly in favor of a State operator's license, believing that it offers great possibilities as a means of ridding the highways of incompetent drivers.

"If I can handle the affairs of my office in a way that will bring about one less accident attributable to the careless handling of the automobile, and which has resulted in many fatalities," said Secretary Lyons, "I will feel that my administration has been successful."

EUROPE'S SADDEST CITY

American Woman's Vivid Description of Suffering in Former Gayest of Capitals

[From a letter written by an American woman with the Friends' Relief Committee in Vienna.]

VIENNA, Nov. 28, 1920.

VIENNA insisted on my coming because I was booked for them. I loved the work at Breslau, and it was a tremendous wrench to get. The German committee ought not to have kept me at all, but if they had not I should not have known about the work in Germany, which I have described before. The work in Austria is very different. Hoover is doing the school children's feeding that is done by the Friends in Germany, and the Friends here are concentrating on children up to 6 years old. They do not have the food cooked and served, but have what are called "depots." The procedure is this: A mother takes her child to a child welfare station and the doctor examines it and puts it into one of three classes of underfeeding. Then the mother gets a ticket with strips for rations for eight weeks which she takes to a depot. Before she goes to the welfare station she goes to the "Brot Commission," of which there are many branches all over the city, and there she gets the "Fursorge Blatt" with which she goes to the Jugend Amt, where the doctor is. The depot is a large room, two-thirds of which is cut off by a line of tables or a counter. Behind the tables sit five Austrian women and behind them are boxes of supplies—cocoa, flour, fat, sugar, condensed milk and soap—enough to keep a child for two weeks. The first woman compares the ticket with the Fursorge Blatt, the second writes the amount. The mother is to pay on the part of the ticket that is to be cut off.

The prices differ with the age of the child. The third cuts off the coupon, the fourth puts it into a box and the fifth tells the two women at the next table how much the woman has paid, and one of them counts the packages into the bag the woman has with her. Everybody pays three kronen as a minimum. If they pay no more the card is called a gratis card. War widows, women with husbands who are 75 per cent. invalid, or two very undernourished children in one family, get two cards, one gratis. The pay cards vary from about 60 to 78 kronen. What they pay is about one-eighth of the market price and really only pays for the cost of transport. In a way it is like a huge grocery store where people are allowed to buy once a fortnight. They buy things that they cannot get in the shops, or things that would be too expensive to buy. Condensed milk costs 60 kronen in the shops, and in the depots the women get three cans for 27 kronen. A kronen used to be about 20 cents. Now one gets 500 kronen for a dollar.

About 40,000 people buy in twenty-three depots. The worker is entirely responsible for two depots in different "Bezirks," one open two afternoons, the other three afternoons, a week. She sees that the depot is supplied with food, has control of the Austrian committee of helpers, decides all disputed questions and keeps in touch with the women. She is also the connecting link between the depot and the welfare centres which furnish the depots with their clientele. They mean to open for another 100 children in outlying industrial districts. The mornings are spent in visiting families to whom gratis cards are granted and other special cases. That is the biggest work here, but I am much more interested in the Mittelstand (middle class). You know how great the class distinctions are here—that they cannot even be interviewed in the same place. The Mittelstand includes Majors and Colonels, and it is pitiful to see men who would not have been seen carrying a parcel before the war glad to drop cans of condensed milk into their pockets and to carry cocoa and sugar and things to their starving wives, and to buy second-hand clothing. Their clothes though shabby still have a decent cut, and they look highbred and so suffering. Almost everything they owned is pawned or sold. I wonder more of them don't commit suicide. There is absolutely nothing ahead of them.

A Colonel 76 years old with a 72-year-old wife came in while I was in the Mittelstand relief office this last week and somehow reminded me of my father and I felt I could not bear it. The work here is so directly with the people that one realizes the suffering more here than one does in Germany, and it is more hopeless. Vienna is allowed only 200,000 tons of coal which come from Upper Silesia. We are allowed a fire all day Sunday, but the rest of the week if we wish to be warm and comparatively comfortable in the evening we must stay in the office on the Singerstrasse. Our food is sent from England, and if we can manage it we must take luncheon and dinner at the Singerstrasse.

Yesterday Dr. Buschbeck, the curator of Vienna's art treasures, took a party of us through the Liechtenstein Gallery. It was a wonderful experience to see the old masters and other treasures under his guidance. He spoke with great sadness of the treasures taken by Italy, and of the ones they still want to take away. He is a very well-to-do man, living in a beautiful, huge apartment, of which he and his family can occupy only two rooms and a kitchen because he cannot get coal to heat it, and there is a young baby in the family. He says there is coal only for two weeks in Vienna. No one knows what will happen after two weeks. The street cars may have to stop. Electric light and gas are strictly rationed, too, and if one uses too much they are shut off. Can you imagine all New York hungry and shivering? I was in a hospital of about one hundred and fifty beds, only for children suffering from underfeeding. I won't harrow you with descriptions of rickety children, but it is a joy to see what wonderful operations can be done to make crooked children straight. Vienna was always famous for its hospitals. Through gifts from many countries this hospital can feed up the children before they have operations, and can keep them until they are strong enough at least to try to hold their own after they leave the hospital.

I am beginning to think that comfortable America must be a dream. Nobody over six years can get a drop of milk here. What there is is rationed by the doctor like medicine. Butter naturally does not exist. I eat bacon fat when I can get it. The Friends have bought about 350 cows from Holland, but you can see how little that can do. The hoof and mouth disease is raging among the Austrian cattle, but has not yet touched the Friends' cattle, which have all been inoculated. I asked one little undernourished boy of 11 years, whose mother has seen better days and whose father is dead, what he would like for Christmas. I have had some money given to me for that purpose. He answered at once, something to eat, and when I asked him what, he said milk, meaning condensed milk.

Our offices are in an old palace. We live in an elegant apartment, six of us, four English and two American women, up five flights of stairs and elevator not running.

Are Your Feet as Nimble as Your Head?

If you're going to think straight you must walk straight. Though your wits measure up, do your feet stand the gaff? Or do they slump, break badly, and put you in a weak position? It's bad business to have to sell short on "pep" because of a decline in your feet.

Get out and WALK! Get the spirit of youth in your feet! Keep WALKING! That's the best tonic in the world for your tired head if you stand on your feet hours every day. But whether you walk or stand be sure that your SHOES are made right.

There are three articles on the Fall of Venizelos and the restoration of Constantine, one by a friend of the former Premier, another by the Editor of the Greek Atlantis defending Constantine; a third relating the dramatic history of his return to Athens.

SYRIA'S TANGLED PROBLEMS

The world's new danger zone is the Biblical Paradise. The full situation is explained in an illuminating article by Professor S. P. Duggan, an authority on history of the Near East. The fascinating story of Emir Feisal is another interesting feature in connection with this topic.

D'ANNUNZIO'S MAD ADVENTURE

The full text of the Rapallo Treaty, not heretofore published in this country, appears in the February number, and the story of the end of d'Annunzio's mad adventure follows as a natural corollary.

THE COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

A valuable feature of the February issue is the complete text of the plan for a Permanent Court of International Justice as revised by the League of Nations Assembly at Geneva—being the first and only publication in America of the complete amended document.

JUGOSLAVIA'S RESOURCES AND BEAUTY

How little is known of this wonderful country will dawn on any intelligent reader on perusing the striking article in the February number by Colonel Atwood, in which he describes in attractive manner the resources and beauty of the new State.

NEW CONSTITUTIONS IN LATIN AMERICA

Analysis of the recent changes in the Constitutions of Mexico, Peru and Uruguay by Professor Herman G. James, forms a historical chapter of deep interest and value.

OUR RULE IN SANTO DOMINGO

Alvin M. Gottschall, an American, who has lived in the interior of Santo Domingo, describes as an unbiased historian the rule of the United States Government in the Island.

OUR WAR IN NORTH RUSSIA

The presence of American soldiers in North Russia and just what they did there have provoked much criticism for years. Colonel W. P. Richardson, who was in command of our troops at Archangel, gives the official story of why they were there and what they did.

Among other topics are:

CANADA'S DISPUTE WITH NEWFOUNDLAND.

NEW BUSINESS HUB

Fifty-seventh Street Pivotal Point in Development of Columbus Circle Section—Building New Skyscrapers

Fifty-seventh Street and Broadway, the pivotal point in the transformation of the Columbus Circle section of the city into the future permanent business centre of the west side, is the sort of location around which some of the oft-repeated romances of realty have been written and talked about.

Fifty-seventh Street and Broadway has the great and enduring advantage of being the one west side business centre, the importance of which will be greatly augmented by future expansion.

The key to the rapid development of West Fifty-seventh Street has been the general trend of business uptown, consequent upon the improvement in rapid transit facilities due to the operation of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit, Brooklyn, Manhattan and Queens subway in Broadway, and via Seventh Avenue (north of Forty-second Street) thence through Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth Streets and by tunnel to Queens, with one of the most important stations on the new line located at Fifty-seventh Street, one block east of Broadway.

Another important factor in the situation is the swing of big business northward in Fifth Avenue, and thence westerly through Fifty-seventh Street to Broadway and the Columbus Circle zone. The selection of Fifty-seventh Street as the route for the Fifth Avenue buses operating between the east and west sides also has been of good effect.

However, the real future of Broadway and Fifty-seventh Street as a principal centre of business became a foregone conclusion and was foreseen by a few of the leading real estate operators and investors long before this one-time hilly section on the line of the old Bloomingdale Road had been reduced to its present grade. This was when the new lines of Broadway and Eighth Avenue were laid down on the city map, and it was observed that the north and south traffic of these two thoroughfares of the Empire City of the future would almost merge at this point, only two short blocks south of Columbus Circle, the point of intersection.

With the lapse of years this is precisely what has taken place, added to which is the influence exerted by the westerly trend of the business that has made Fifth Avenue famous the world over, and which has taken the shape of costly modern buildings.

Now, with the erection of such business structures as the United States Rubber Company and Goodrich Buildings at Fifty-eighth Street, the new twenty-five-story Fisk Building, and the Chevrolet and Consolidated Gas Company business homes in Fifty-seventh Street, and the Gotham National Bank Building at Fifty-ninth Street, together with the proposed reimprovement of the thoroughfare block Fifty-seventh to Fifty-eighth Street, Broadway to Eighth Avenue, by Commissioner Harris and his associates, and the proposed erection of the largest hotel in the world (the Commonwealth) on the square block occupied at present by the Sonoma, Rockingham, and Van Corlear apartment houses and various other buildings, the character of this entire neighborhood is changing mightily.

Also, sooner or later, the old Grenoble Hotel, and properties adjoining, at Fifty-sixth Street and Seventh Avenue, are to be replaced with a twenty-six-story hostelry, to be known as the Hotel Marne.

Thus, except for the large C. B. Potter holding, at the northwest corner of Fifty-sixth Street and Broadway, adjoining the Fisk "skyscraper," the block front of vacant property in the west side of Eighth Avenue, from Fifty-sixth to Fifty-seventh Street, faced by the Fisk building, and the George Ehret taxpayer parcel, facing in Columbus Circle, practically every available site of any considerable dimension and suitable for a really big improvement—such, for instance, as the Fisk building—has been, or is to be soon improved with a permanent building approximating the structural limit.

In one sense Fifty-seventh Street, as a 100-foot crosstown thoroughfare, is in a class by itself. Whereas every other, similar lateral (Fourteenth, Twenty-third, Thirty-fourth, Forty-second, Fifty-ninth and Seventy-second Street), outlets directly upon a prominent "square" or "circle," such as Union, Madison, Herald, Times and Sherman Squares, and Columbus Circle, Fifty-seventh Street is located two blocks south of the Circle bearing the name of the discoverer of America, and is free from the surface car trackage with which all of the others, except Seventy-second Street, are burdened.

Fifty-seventh Street, however, although trackage free, nevertheless is situate only two short blocks south of Fifty-ninth Street, which is the route of one of the most important of all the crosstown surface car lines, having connection directly with the Queensboro Bridge.

Fifty-seventh Street, therefore, as a carriage street, has attracted the highest class of business and trade, while on the extreme east side this broad driveway is the gateway to that modern Mayfair, or Faubourg Saint Germain, soon to be created from the complete reconstruction of the houses grouped around Sutton Place, overlooking the East River.

Here, in this residential oasis, some of the most prominent families of New York are to have their future homes, including Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, who recently disposed of her house at Fifty-second Street and Fifth Avenue, having sold it to the Empire Trust Company for about three million dollars.

On the extreme west side of town a great bridge soon will span the Hudson River, with its New York approach located at the foot of West Fifty-seventh Street, unless the plans of the Hudson Villa Bridge Commission miscarry. Meantime, according to the plans of the Public Service Commission, a new subway will be under way, if not actually in operation, in Eighth Avenue, with a station to be located at Fifty-seventh Street at the Fisk Building, and connecting with the existing Fifty-ninth Street (Columbus Circle) Station on the original Broadway subway.

It would then be a small matter to extend the Columbus Circle station to Fifty-seventh Street, and to run a tunnel through that thoroughfare from Seventh to Eighth Avenue, by means of which all three of the subway stations would be linked up.

As a vehicular highway Fifty-seventh Street, 100 feet in width and free of trackage—will become an even more important artery of travel than it is today when the traffic from Long Island and over the Queensboro Bridge is increased by that which flows into the City of New York by way of the new Hudson River bridge. Fifty-seventh Street is the only crosstown thoroughfare in New York capable of supporting such a burden of the future years.

The millions of population north of Forty-second Street are trying assiduously to avoid the inconvenience of doing business in the congested districts south of Forty-seventh Street.

This condition accounts for the formation of a new east side and midtown business centre, "Little Wall Street," at Forty-second Street and Madison Avenue, and is forcing the quick development of a west side centre at Broadway and Fifty-seventh Street, where the trade tides of Fifth Avenue and the west side meet and merge, "at the bend of the river."

Finally, the importance of Fifty-seventh Street today and in the future cannot be estimated accurately without considering the effect of Central Park as a barrier to the construction of business buildings. Only south of the park can buildings be erected which, with any degree of certainty, will have the power to attract the business man who wishes and finds it necessary to be in touch with the vast interests of both the east and west sides, Long Island and the State of New Jersey.

Any business building of the future erected north of Fifty-ninth Street, either east or west of the Park, can expect only to cater to purely neighborhood requirements. This will continue to be the case at least until every available site south of the park, and easily accessible from all easterly and westerly points, has been absorbed and improved with a permanent building.

Central Park is a barrier not to be lightly regarded or easily overcome, and Fifty-seventh Street the city's last and most northerly business thoroughfare.

The Fisk Building, which replaced the time-honored Rutland and St. Augustine apartment houses, and which will be the tallest and most conspicuous building on Broadway north of Chambers Street, occupies the entire south side of Fifty-seventh Street from Broadway to Eighth Avenue, and is characteristic of the kaleidoscopic changes which rapidly are furnishing the City of New York with a new and most accessible centre of big business.

Rapid progress is being made now in the construction of this new monolith, which is being erected for the Fisk Rubber Tire Company by Fred T. Ley & Co., the builders of some of the largest and most costly business buildings and apartment houses in New York and elsewhere.

The site on which the new twenty-five story Fisk Building now is being erected (containing 20,000 square feet) was assembled by the Cross & Brown Company, who also are the renting agents.

EARLY UNION SQUARE DAYS.

Fourteenth Street Called Heart of the City Eighty Years Ago.

Every one who is truly interested in the progress of this metropolitan city enjoys looking backward occasionally to view certain landmarks which stand for distinct periods in the growth of New York. The laying out of Union Square and the development of the neighborhood into a fashionable home community, about eighty years ago, marks one of these times. What this change meant to the gradually expanding city may be seen from the following notice which appeared in The New York Mirror in March, 1839:

"No better proof need be required for renewed prosperity than is seen in the innumerable improvements around Union Place. New blocks of houses, capacious and stately, are springing up with surprising celerity. At the corner of Broadway and Eighth Street, a beautiful square extending to the Bowery and occupying some acres of ground is soon to be enclosed. On the East River, the wharves from Coffee House Slip to Corlears Hook are to be enlarged and improved. It is proposed to extend Broadway some miles beyond Union Place. As the business of the city creeps, we should rather say strides, further up Broadway, the fashion and wealth of the city is retreating nearer to the centre of the island, and Fourteenth Street will doubtless be considered the heart rather than the extremity of the town in the course of a few years."

Company to Build for Owners.

A new corporation known as the Owners' Construction Corporation, with offices at 25 West Forty-third Street, has been organized, having among its stockholders a number of men identified with the various branches of the building industry. It proposes to build homes in any of the suburbs of New York on the "build-to-order" plan, and will assist in financing.

The officers are Bert S. Kerkimer, President and General Manager; John A. Baldwin, First Vice President; Edwin A. Kingsley, Second Vice President; George M. Wood, Treasurer, and Myer Efros, Assistant Treasurer and Secretary. The company has been capitalized at $500,000.

Bronx Borough Sales.

Richard H. Scobie has sold to a client for the Halpin estate the northeast corner of 231st Street and Broadway, a three-story brick building, with stores. This property has been in the Halpin family for fifty years.

The three-family house at 699 Jackson Avenue, on lot 15 by 70 feet, has been purchased by Julius Feuerelien from Joseph Jospe. The broker was Edward Polak.

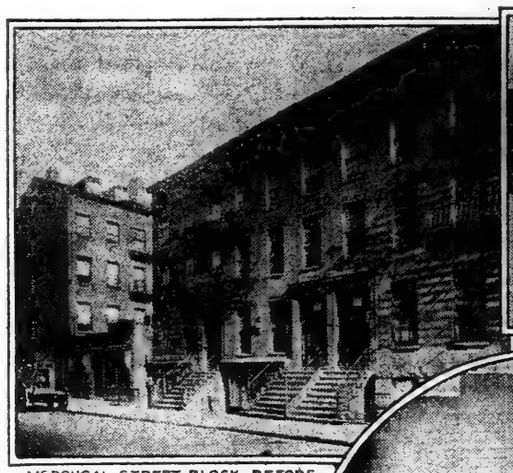
He also sold the five-story flat at 963 East 179th Street, plot 54 by 102.

Staten Island Deals.

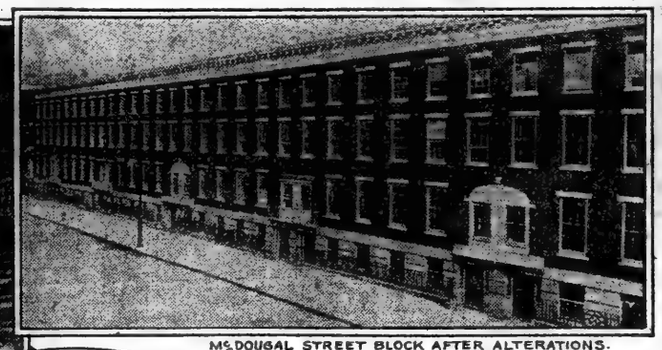
The dwelling at 128 Bard Avenue, Livingston, S. I., has been purchased by Walter Lambert from Mrs. Mabel E. Wardle. The broker was W. S. F. Hall. He also sold the dwelling at 470 Henderson Avenue.

BLOCK OF OLD HOUSES IN LOWER GREENWICH VILLAGE SECTION REMODELED INTO MODERN APARTMENTS

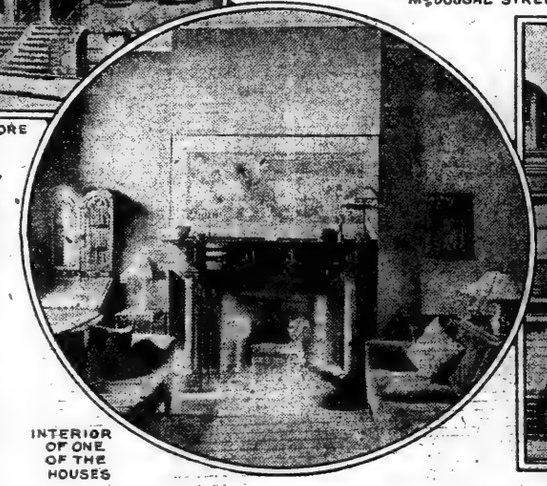
Once Fashionable Residence Centre in Manhattan That Had Fallen Into Decay and Ruin Given a New Lease of Life by a Development That Will Cost Close to a Million Dollars—Loft Buildings Turned Into Apartments



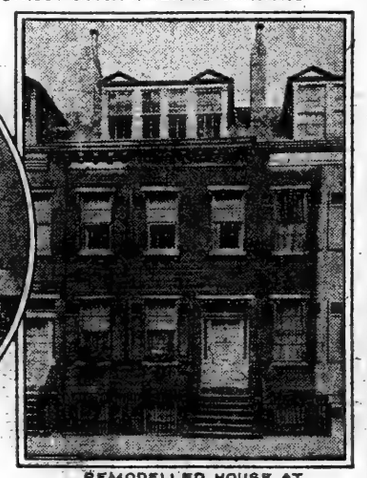
McDOUGAL STREET BLOCK BEFORE ALTERATIONS



McDOUGAL STREET BLOCK AFTER ALTERATIONS.



INTERIOR OF ONE OF THE HOUSES



REMODELLED HOUSE AT 25 VANDAM STREET.

An operation of great interest not only from a real estate point of view, but also for the general public and homeseeker, is reaching completion in the remodeling of the entire square block bounded by Macdougal, Bleecker, West Houston and Sullivan Streets by the Hearth & Home, Inc., of which William Sloane Coffin is President and Francis Y. Joannes and Maxwell Hyde the architects.

This is probably the largest improvement of its kind recently undertaken in New York and the first time that an entire block controlled by one owner has been remodeled and its entire character changed. It is interesting to find that as a result of the work being done on this block many other improvements have already been started in the immediate neighborhood.

It would be difficult to find buildings in a more wretched condition than many of the houses in the block before improvements were begun. Many of the houses were either partially or entirely empty as they had deteriorated so far that nothing short of complete alteration would have been a paying proposition for the owner.

When first built many years ago these houses were, no doubt, among the finest and most fashionable in the city—the old Commodore Vanderbilt house with its charming balconies is still standing immediately opposite 84 Macdougal Street—and dirty and dilapidated as these houses had become, the fine trim, doors any many of the mantels were still to be seen and have of course been retained.

A feature of interest in this operation is that here for the first time it has been shown that a building long used as a loft building can be remodeled into an apartment house with profit to the owner.

No. 370 Bleecker Street was originally a tenement, afterward changed to a loft building, then a men's lodging house, then a tenement and for years afterward a loft building. Old inhabitants recall the goats which they say the tenants kept in this building in the old days. It has been remodeled into a modern apartment of three and four rooms and bath.

Mr. Coffin did not undertake this large transaction without experience, as he has been operating in this district in similar transactions for some time, beginning four years ago with the purchase of fifteen houses on Charlton Street from the Trinity Corporation, followed by the purchase of about twenty more houses in Charlton, King and Vandam Streets, most of these houses having now been altered into apartments and studios, and it was the success and exceptional demand for these houses that influenced Mr. Coffin and his associates to undertake the square block improvement.

There is a large population in New York—writers, artists, teachers and other professional men and women—people of discrimination and taste, who much prefer a home of individuality and character to the usual typical apartment, and when such a home can be found—located so that it is but a short walk to the Wall Street district, and but a few minutes by subway and elevated to Times Square and, when added to this, the long evening ride in crowded subway is avoided—it is not surprising that there is a demand for these apartments.

Some of the people well known in literary and artistic New York who are now living in houses altered by Mr. Coffin are Professor Henry S. Canby, Mrs. Jacob Riis, Scudder Middleton, Paul Kellogg, Floyd Dell, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Fuller, Robert Dunbar, Lucian Cary, Henry Adams Brown and many others equally prominent.

There are forty-two buildings on the block and, with the exception of five of the houses which have been altered into a Girls' Community Club, the balance of the private houses have been altered in a uniform manner.

A feature of the project is the unbroken space between rear walls of 100 by 240 feet. There are some fine trees here and by the omission of fences, building of stepping stone paths and pleasant planting this will become a charming oasis in lower New York.

The houses have been remodeled in the following manner: High stoops have been removed and new basement entrances installed. The old sills and lintels were kept, simply patched and painted, and the old cornice which was of excellent design, was retained. These houses have but two kitchens so do not come under the jurisdiction of the Tenement House Department.

A small low pressure steam plant has been installed for each house; new plumbing and electric work installed throughout. The basement and first floor make a duplex apartment of five rooms and bath, with four large closets and a real old fashioned kitchen, 13 by 16 feet, with generous pantry in addition.

The living room and dining rooms have open fireplaces—the glazed casement doors of the dining room opening into the pleasant vista of the garden.

The second floor is arranged as one apartment of four rooms and bath. Here also the kitchen is of generous size and good closet space and open fireplaces add to the attractiveness of the apartment. The third floor is arranged in two non-housekeeping apartments, each consisting of living room, bedroom and bath.

The success of this undertaking, and its real contribution to the solution of the housing problem, is an excellent example of what can be done with similar properties in other parts of the city and lead to the rehabilitation of many old buildings, not only for the benefit of the owners, but for the public welfare.

FINDING STREET NUMBERS.

Quick Methods of Locating Buildings on Manhattan Island.

Due to the meagre opportunity to find a City Directory which contains the desired information, Lewis Phillips of L. J. Phillips & Co. has arranged a table, which, for general purposes, makes clear a street destination when but an avenue number is given.

The Borough of Manhattan street layout, on any avenue (except above Fifth Avenue), has arranged the house numbering to contain ten numbers to each side of an avenue, from street to street.

If an avenue faces a park or river the numbers follow in single numerals. If faced on either side by private property these graduate in double numerals, odd on one side, even on another.

It therefore becomes an easy matter to arrive at the desired conclusion, if one is acquainted with the streets at which such avenues start. Say, for example, one wished to know the street location of 290 Riverside Drive.

As Riverside Drive contains but one side there are twenty-nine blocks at ten house numbers to each to make the figure 290. Add to this quotient (29) the figure 72, as Riverside Drive commences at Seventy-second Street, and we have 101st Street.

Now, were one to want Columbus, Amsterdam or West End Avenues, each having buildings which face on either side, the division would be made by twenty, to each block front, adding to them 59, Fifty-ninth Street being the street at which each of these avenues begins.

This rule is infallible on any avenue which starts north of Twenty-third Street, Madison Avenue, due to Madison Square, numberings becomes a vaguery for computation, and as a general proposition, the addition of twenty-eight rather than twenty-three answers requirements.

All the avenues starting below Twenty-third Street are fairly reliable by the above formula, but may differ to an extent of some three blocks discrepancy.

Broadway is susceptible to the same rule by division by twenty. (Let it here be said that diagonally running avenues bear the same complement of numbers as those which run straight.)

Due, on this artery, to the number of named streets before numbered streets begin, furthermore aggravated because Union Square (which merges into Broadway on the west side) is numbered as Union Square, and not as Broadway, no calculation can be had south of Twenty-fourth Street; from Twenty-fourth Street, north, a Broadway house number should be divided by twenty, from which result deduct thirty-one (deduction due to cause above stated).

Fifth Avenue was destined to contain a wider house than other thoroughfares and admits of house numbering to but seven on either side (from street to street) and cannot be calculated north of Central Park's start (Fifty-ninth Street). Below the Park—a division by fourteen and the addition of seven, its starting point, to reconcile with an imaginary line of Seventh Street if extended to Fifth Avenue, is satisfactory.

Lorington Apartment Transfer.

The twelve-story Lorington apartment house on the northwest corner of Central Park West and Seventieth Street has been conveyed by the Blessington Corporation to Alfred L. Rose and Elmer M. Kimbark, who transferred the property to the More Realty Holding Corporation. The structure stands on a plot fronting 100.5 feet on Central Park West and 150 feet on Seventieth Street. It was conveyed subject to a mortgage for $970,000.

Tenant Buys Fourteenth St. Home.

Durosa Company has sold the four-story dwelling at 325 West Fourteenth Street, to the present tenant, Dr. Leroy B. Sherman, for George E. Hoe and the estate of William C. Hoe. Dr. Sherman has occupied the house for eighteen years. The lot is 23 by 126 feet.

Sales at Larchmont.

The residence formerly owned by William E. Atkinson at Larchmont has been purchased by Anton F. Bearslog. Fish & Marvin were the brokers and they also sold at Larchmont a bungalow owned by John C. Hansen to Richard B. Bevier.

Commercial Leases.

The Brown-Wheelock Company leased to the Hudson River Bridge Corporation the ninth floor in the T. A. Gillespie Building, at 5 and 7 Dey Street, and in the same building the tenth floor to Powell, Wynne & Roberts.

A. V. Amy & Co. have leased to the Minerva Automobiles, Inc., the store at 135 West Seventy-second Street.

MacLean & Co. leased a store at 108 West Twenty-fourth Street to Selig Handel and a store at 110 West Twenty-fourth Street to the Highland Neckwear Company.

Bronger & Co. have leased the remodeled five-story building at 103 Lexington Avenue to the Motta Company.

$150,000 Vesey Street Investment.

An investing client of William A. White & Sons purchased from Augusta Larned, of the estate of W. Z. Larned, 52 and 54 Vesey Street. The property which consists of two five-story commercial lofts on a plot 50 by 101.6, was held at $150,000. The same brokers sold seven months ago the adjoining piece of property at 50 Vesey Street to Frederick Brown, operator, who recently resold it.

NEW TIMES SQUARE THEATRE

OFFICE RENTS DECLINE

Commercial Space in Grand Central Zone Cheaper Than for Several Years—Big Building Activity

Many individuals composing the hard working and more or less simple minded public have asked the very natural question within the last few weeks why it was possible to erect so many office buildings in the city and so few apartment houses. The activity in commercial building has been especially marked during the past year in the Grand Central terminal zone district and, to some extent, in the Times Square area. Seventh Avenue from the lower Thirties to Forty-second Street is also showing evidences of this commercial building activity, also some parts of Fifth Avenue, the huge textile building on the easterly block front between Thirtieth and Thirty-first Streets, being the largest individual operation with the exception of the Heckscher-Backer Building on the old Whitney homesite, with additional property at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street. The New Gotham Bank edifice on Columbus Circle and the big Fisk Rubber Company's building on the south side of Fifty-seventh Street, between Broadway and Eighth Avenue, still further show the effect of this business construction in another prominent centre.

The reason for this sharp distinction in the erection of commercial structures as contrasted to places for homes is due, in the opinion of expert realty men, to the laws enacted by the Legislature regarding rents and the reasonable eviction of undesirable tenants. These laws seem to have proved the views expressed at the time that their chief effect would be to retard apartment houses construction. It will be remembered that suggestions were made before the Legislature at its special session that somewhat similar restrictions should be placed upon office buildings, but that was not done.

"The result has been," remarked one prominent broker who has several large commercial structures under his management, "that capital for new construction has gone, almost exclusively, into commercial and office buildings. Up to two years ago, in fact the condition remained as early as a year ago, large office space in the financial areas and in the Times Square and Grand Central zone districts was at a premium and bonuses were paid for satisfactory space. That situation has now passed. This scarcity for commercial leasing has readjusted itself in a natural manner, and it is my opinion that had the more drastic laws not been enacted against apartments the present situation in that line would have been much more favorable now, and that a fairly good number of new apartments would be in the market for rental."

Up to a year ago office rentals in the choice parts of the city were at their highest peak, much higher than is the case today. The supply was limited and the demand was great. In the Grand Central zone, where that stringency was very apparent a year ago, building operations have been noticeably active and more high-class commercial structures will be available for tenants in that section between May 1 and Nov. 1 than in any other business centre of the city. Thousands of square feet of excellent floor space will be ready within a short time and large concerns desiring one or more entire floors will have no difficulty in obtaining about what they want. One only has to notice the recent advertisements of many of these new buildings to see how liberal an allowance of floor space may be secured by individual tenants, running all the way from 500 square feet or less to entire floors containing several thousand square feet.

The question of whether all of these new buildings will be well rented when ready for occupancy is one that has not yet been definitely settled to the complete satisfaction of the owning interests or the brokers in general charge. Up to a very short time ago the renting market was practically dead. Despite new buildings at reasonable rentals there was a persistent holding off on the part of prospective tenants. This is partially due, it is believed, to the prevailing business depression which has noticeably curtailed that tendency to expansion so marked one or two years ago. In some cases tenants have arranged for somewhat smaller space. Brokers, however, now believe that the upward tendency has set in. Scores of tenants whose leases expire on May 1 have been holding off in making new rentals, believing, perhaps, that careful looking around and bargaining may bring advantages of lower rents.

The period of lower rents in good office space is already here. The fancy prices of the last two years have gone. Rent values, in the opinion of another prominent realty man, are cheaper now than they have been for some time and in his opinion are cheaper than they will be for several years to come. In the rental, therefore, of these new buildings the next four weeks will provide a very practical object lesson of the general confidence in the readjustment of business to something approximating its former prosperity. Within the last week or two several clear indications have been given that tenants whose leases will soon expire or who desire changes for extra room are beginning to make decisions and the further fact that several very large leases for the new buildings are pending present another encouraging feature.

knows whether all or nearly all of the

At the present time no one actually available space will be rented by May 1. Some of the space announced for that time may not be ready, but such structures as may not be wholly completed by May 1 will be opened in the very near future.

"We can predict nothing," said one broker. "The prospects are brightening and it is quite possible that all of the space that will actually be ready by May 1 will be taken. Inquiries are more numerous, and a favorable feature is the increasing demand for entire floors. For the tenants this is a very opportune time to get space in some of the best buildings in the city."

Among the larger of the new buildings which, it is promised, will surely be ready by May 1 is the Madison offices, covering most of the westerly Madison Avenue block front between Forty-third and Forty-fourth Streets, twenty-three stories. The only rival in the new Liggett Building at the northeast corner of Madison Avenue and Forty-second Street, taking in nearly all the avenue block front and a portion of Forty-third Street, which is being erected by the Fred T. Ley Co., Inc. Others are the Borden Building on Forty-fifth Street, between Madison and Fifth Avenues; the twelve-story Straus Building on the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Forty-sixth Street; the Gotham Bank, twenty-three-story building at Columbus Circle; the remodeled National City Building, formerly the Manhattan Hotel; the Lowe Building at Broadway and Forty-fifth Street, northeast corner; the Textile Building on the easterly Fifth Avenue block front, between Thirtieth and Thirty-first Streets, one of George Backer's operations and into which tenants are now moving. It is also stated that it is more than half rented. Other structures include the sixteen-story building at 15 West Thirty-seventh Street, the ten-story Larimore Building at 15 and 17 West Forty-sixth Street, the Penn Terminal Building on Seventh Avenue, between Thirtieth and Thirty-first Streets, the westerly block front; the Columbia Trust Building at Fifth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, enlarged to fourteen stories; the Armion Building at Seventh Avenue and Thirty-sixth Street and possibly half a dozen others of smaller size, of which the Fred F. French Building on the northwest corner of Madison Avenue and Forty-first Street may be mentioned.

Those which will come later will be the big Liggett building, the towering Heckscher-Backer building, at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street; the Fisk Rubber building, on Fifty-seventh Street, and the remodeled Knickerbocker Hotel building. The Wurlitzer building, in Forty-second Street, has recently been completed, and several floors leased by the General Motors Corporation. To this array of large structures will soon be added another if the plans are immediately carried out, in the erection of an eighteen-story building on the plot to the west of the former Grand Central Palace, now known under its new ownership as the Central Square Building. It was recently taken over on a long-term lease from the New York Central interests by R. M. Catts, and he also leased the block to the west, bounded by Depew Place, Park Avenue, Forty-sixth and Forty-seventh Streets, 80 by 200 feet for the erection of another large commercial structure in the Grand Central Terminal zone.

The two large structures nearing completion on Seventh Avenue, on the two westerly Thirty-seventh Street corners for the needle trade industries will also exert an appreciable effect upon commercial building vacancies, as these two mammoth buildings will house many manufacturing and semi-manufacturing tenants now in the Fifth Avenue retail area.

The expansion of business in all of this uptown section is so strong that it will not be long before all of the space, enormous as it may seem, will be fully occupied, and even though it should take a few months to fill all of the new places in the Grand Central Terminal zone, the increasing demand there from big business interests will soon take up the available supply.

Among the recent leases which indicate a turn of the tide in leasing activity in this area is that of the Crucible Steel Company of America, which has just contracted to take two entire floors from the National City Corporation in the remodeled Manhattan Hotel at an aggregate rental of $2,000,000. A significant feature is that this company will move to its uptown home from 2 Rector Street. The Eastern Steel Company, now at 60 Broadway, has just leased large space in the 50 East Forty-second Street Building, on the southeast Madison Avenue corner, erected a few years ago by August Heckscher. While of a different character, the lease last week of the Athens Hotel on Forty-second Street, with frontages on Madison Avenue and Forty-first Street, for forty-two years, at about $80,000 a year for the first five years, is of more than noteworthy interest. Extensive alterations are contemplated and eventually the new lessees plan a substantial hotel improvement.

Pease & Elliman sold for Artemas Holmes his residence at 118 East Seventy-sixth Street to a client for occupancy. The property consists of a four-story dwelling on a lot 16 by 100 feet, held at $45,000.

The four-story residence at 68 West Sixty-eighth Street, lot 22 by 102.2 feet, has been sold by Coughlan & Cilsby for Ida Hess to George Fullersteen and Mary Maynes.

Bronger & Co. have sold the three-story dwelling at 232 East Forty-eighth Street to Herman Drebes.

Edna P. Billups sold to Geneva M. Morgan the three-story dwelling at 222 West 131st Street.

Henry Ewell sold to Irving Schach the four-story house with stores at 1,650 Lexington Avenue, northwest corner of 104th Street, 17.7 by 55.

Buys Mercer Street Loft.

The five-story commercial building at 173 Mercer Street, plot 37 by 25 feet, has been resold by the Charles F. Noyes Company for William D. and Samuel Kilpatrick to F. W. Tupper, President of the F. W. Tupper Manufacturing Company, now at 45 Vesey Street. The property was held at $25,000 and will be occupied by the new owners.

Farmingdale Factory Sold.

The New Jersey Machinery Exchange purchased the property of the Allaire Woodworkers' Corporation, opposite the Central railroad station at Farmingdale, N. J., through Louis Schlesinger, Inc. It consists of several factory buildings containing about 11,000 square feet, with plot of 3½ acres, fronting on the Central railroad about 1,000 feet.

LUNCHEON TO DR. HARRISS.

New Traffic Towers Planned for Fifth Avenue.

The members of the Fifth Avenue Association will tender a testimonial luncheon to Dr. John A. Harriss, special Deputy Police Commissioner, in charge of traffic in New York City, at the Waldorf-Astoria on Thursday, March 10, at 12:30 P. M.

The Chairman of the Luncheon Committee, H. A. Ahern, announced last week that the Hon. John B. Stanchfield had accepted the invitation of the Fifth Avenue Association to be the toastmaster and that Richard E. Enright, Police Commissioner, would be one of the speakers. More than five hundred reservations have already been made.

It was due to Dr. Harriss that the present Fifth Avenue traffic control system came into existence. This system has now been in effect for about one year and not only the Fifth Avenue merchants, but the vast automobile public and pedestrians, have been greatly benefited thereby.

It has not been generally known by the public that the erection of the five traffic control towers now in operation on Fifth Avenue, from Thirty-fourth to Fifty-seventh Street, have been maintained throughout the entire year of their existence at the personal expense of Deputy Police Commissioner Harriss.

In planning the erection of these towers there was no attempt made toward beautifying them in any manner, but, now that the system has been in effect for almost a year, the towers are to be made permanent. The Fifth Avenue merchants feel that the control towers should be rebuilt and made attractive in form and design. Several plans have already been submitted to the Fifth Avenue Association. With this in view, the merchants along the avenue contemplate raising by subscription among themselves a fund sufficient for this purpose.

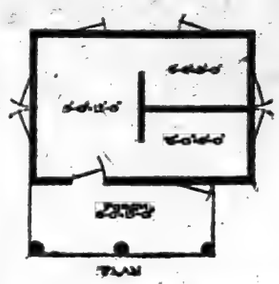
The Lure of the Great Outdoors



There is no life comparable to that of the great outdoors, living under blue skies by the cool seashore or in the woods. You are your own master, leading a life of independence and ease which you cannot lead in the city or the suburbs.

How many people there are who would like to get away from the noise and dirt of the city during the hot summer months, and yet have no place to go. People who cannot afford the expense of living at resort hotels, and yet who would like to spend a moderate sum for a summer-long place of their own.

To these people the BOSSERT SPORT CAMP makes an instant appeal, for it is the ideal small house for the seashore or the woods.

Containing three rooms, it has plenty of living space for two men or a family of three. Has a coating of creosote stain which preserves the wood, and the materials used in its construction are such that the house will last for years.

The Bossert method of construction guarantees perfect fit of all parts of the house, and enables any amateur to erect it. Houses are shipped by truck at nominal transportation cost or by freight, F. O. B. Brooklyn. Price $500.00. See the Bossert Sport Camp at the Sportsman's Show. Representatives present to take orders.

TOMS RIVER ESTATES

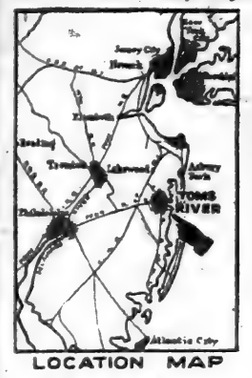
a subdivision of blocks and plots making ideal farms for raising chickens, vegetables and table produce on a scale as will best suit your desires.

TOMS RIVER

The Home of the White Leghorn.

TOMS RIVER is a magnificent, thriving, well-organized town, and the Chamber of Commerce will extend a hearty welcome should you locate here. Come out and see for yourself the great money-making possibilities of the chicken industry. This is the home of the white leghorn, with an ever-increasing ready market right at your door, at all times, for fresh eggs. The main highways leading to town from all directions are the best in the State. TOMS RIVER is the half way stopping place between Philadelphia, New York and Atlantic City. During the winter and summer months automobiling is the favorite pastime. The district also affords yachting, boating, fishing, and numerous other sports. Being situated far enough inland to escape the severe weather, it still has all the pleasures of the seashore.

Make your permanent home on the TOMS RIVER ESTATES even if your business is located in the City. Come out daily or week-ends. Winter or summer, the climate is always invigorating.



LOCATION MAP

TOMS RIVER ESTATES, high, dry and level, with wide streets, situate about a mile from the heart of Toms River, county seat of Ocean County, New Jersey, having a population of about 4,500, and 15,000 during the summer season. IDEAL living and climatic conditions, good hotels, stores, schools, churches, two banks, electric light, water, gas, telephone and telegraph service. Every comfort and convenience of the large cities, TOMS RIVER is only 62 miles from New York, 50 miles from Philadelphia, 45 miles from Atlantic City, and 10 miles from Lakewood, the winter home of George Gould, John D. Rockefeller, and other prominent men. Toms River is within commuting distance of Philadelphia and New York, on either the Jersey Central or the Pennsylvania Railways, the latter railway passing directly through TOMS RIVER ESTATES.

"Just As If You Built for Yourself"

The Borden Building

WHEN the rapidly developing business of the Borden Company made larger offices necessary, it was decided to not only erect a new building which would have every modern improvement and advantage, but also to locate it in the most desirable part of New York from the standpoint of accessibility.

It was also decided to erect a building large enough to permit the office space for other institutions and for stores on the ground floor.

SO while the Borden Company will occupy ten of the twenty-three floors, there are available stores, offices and entire floors for the use of the other institutions.

In locating your office in the Borden Building, you are assured of the advantages and conveniences which you would have if you were building for yourself.

THE care as to refinements and appointments which one finds in the home a man builds for himself will obtain in this office building which is being built by a great business institution for its own home. Other firms who share in the use of the Borden Building will find particular satisfaction in the location, in the arrangement of the floors, permitting an abundance of light on all four sides. The peculiar excellence of the elevator service will prove distinctive and a genuine compliment to your patrons.

THE smaller lower floors, containing from 4,000 to 9,000 square feet, will prove most popular with institutions desiring an entire floor of modest dimensions while offices of various sizes have been arranged on other floors, and stores are available on the ground floor.

An illustrated booklet, showing floor plans, upon request.

SUBURBAN REAL ESTATE

New Jersey—For Sale or To Let.

ON ACCOUNT OF A DEATH in the family and being left all alone, I offer for sale that which money could not have bought from me 3 weeks ago, a real home, situated an hour and 14 minutes distant from Jersey City via the Central R. R. of N. J., only 20 minutes' drive from Lakewood, and the same from the ocean, as well as a short run from Red Bank, N. J.; the house has 10 rooms and 4 baths, with all the glass and plate glass windows all over the house, quarter sawed oak floors, tiled kitchen and electric ice box known as the Frigidaire installed; the kitchen has a tiled floor laid by Kennedy of N. Y.; the living room a Sienna convent mantel; the heating system is simply perfect, there being a Thatcher furnace vacuum system steam heat with Hoffman valves; the dining room has beamed ceiling and is wainscoted; there is a 2-car garage; the lot which is 50x175 feet in size, has an open space of 20 feet on one side of the house and about 70 feet on the other; asbestos shingle roof; the property can be had at a price much less than cost new, as the impulse to sell is upon me; I will sell the house alone or, if desired, I will include all of the furniture, linens, Oriental rugs, pictures, coal, library of several thousand volumes, 2 sewing machines, curtains and draperies, china, cut glass, ware, solid silver ware, Victrola with records, electric lamps (one of which cost ...) and is mentioned only to convey an idea of the kind of things I offer to dispose of, supply of potatoes and hundreds of (home canned) cans of jellies, fruits and vegetables; the 5-foot kitchen sink is of one piece solid porcelain, with drain boards of porcelain, a kitchen cabinet, combination kitchen range for coal and a Detroit Jewel Star vapor oil stove, cooking utensils of aluminum and white enamel; in short, everything that any one can desire in a first class home; the house is Colonial in style and 36x36 feet in size; nothing was left out when the house was constructed that would make it better or more livable; the opportunity is most exceptional and, if interested, prompt action is recommended, as it will not stay long unsold; I would retain a few personal belongings and leave everything else; nothing need be purchased by the one fortunate enough to get this place other than that which is here, to begin housekeeping at once in a complete home ready for immediate occupancy; the house is attractive, and some people have been kind enough to say that it is artistic in appearance and furnishings; nothing has been cheap, but it is all very good; the house is so new that it has not yet been ... rated, it having been occupied only ... months; I will also include my 1920 ... "special 6" Studebaker car, which has ... 7,000 miles; if interested, photos on request. Address G. W. O., Box 212, ... lingdale, New Jersey.

A FRIEND of mine who has lived here several years, but who shortly has to return to England, has asked me to sell his very beautiful country home, situated at a very convenient commuting distance from New York City. The house is excellently built, well laid out and contains six master bedrooms and three baths. There is a garage on the property for two cars, with quarters and bathroom above. Grounds, one and a half acres, in the best of condition, including vegetable and flower garden. Price $35,000, which is a great bargain. I am not in the real estate business. Will deal only with principals.

OVER the pavements and under the hill
To hunt a home, went Jack and Jill;
To their dismay they found too soon
That prices still soared like the cow o'er the moon;
But they never gave up till at last they came
To a real apartment deserving the name,
Where everything savored of the days of yore.
A bathroom and kitchen, and bright rooms, four.
So now they are settled and live there still;
There's one for you to have if you will.

EXECUTIVE.
TO SUBSTANTIAL CONCERNS ONLY.
HAVE YOU A PLACE FOR A $10,000 EXECUTIVE, PROVIDED YOU CAN NAME HIS SALARY?
This is not the ad of a man out of a job, but of one who feels dissatisfied with his present work and is willing to make a big financial sacrifice to get the right job; age, 39; health, perfect; brains, working; energy, above par.
The war found me in a happy $8,000 job as head of a sales department, handling a competitive standard article, and left me in specialty selling, where I have become in turn department head, field supervisor of sales and sales manager. I have never liked specialty sales work, yet I find myself earning $10,000 a year in it. Before a business revival takes me to $15,000, and so fastens me to a distasteful job for life, I prefer to get back into some big company that handles a staple commodity.
I have always held the loyalty and confidence of my men and co-workers, and have been specially successful in handling negotiations that required diplomatic tact, or the adjustment of many divergent views to a single program. If you can use a builder of sales, an adjuster of difficulties, an educator of personnel, address D 184 Times.

OFFICE BOYS.

Henry L. Doherty & Company, 60 Wall Street, are always in need of good boys. They have been very fortunate thus far in getting good boys, but in selecting them it has required a lot of time in personal interviews and in checking up references.

Three boys are wanted now. They are not wanted as office boys in the sense that you look upon "office boys." To make clear what is meant by the statement, the Doherty Organization gave 61 boy workers a dinner in the Women's Luncheon and Rest Room a few days before Christmas.

A guest of honor at this dinner was Mr. Frank W. Frueauff, partner in the house of Henry L. Doherty & Company, and the managing executive. In addressing the boys on that occasion he said: "I don't want you boys to think that you are 'office boys.' I want you to know how we regard you. We look on you as junior partners. We must have boys to do a lot of work that men cannot afford to take the time to do, but the work you boys are doing is a stepping stone to better positions with Henry L. Doherty & Company, if you will do your work well—show an interest in it—and try to learn all you can about the business.

"If you have not advanced as far in your studies as you think you ought to, and you want to take on a course of study at night while working for us, we will gladly contribute toward the expense of such a course. We want to see you develop; we want to help you make men of yourselves. We want you to fit yourselves to fill more responsible positions. A great many of our executives have grown from such positions as you now fill. We hope all of you will wish to remain with us during your working life. We will do our part in giving you the chance, but you must be made of the right stuff and have the right spirit in order to win a high place in our organization."

This will give you an idea of the opportunities offered to boys who are fortunate enough to become associated with Henry L. Doherty & Company.

Now, instead of having boys call at the offices, 60 Wall Street, we want them to write a letter of their own composition; we want them to furnish us a letter from their parents, in which they will tell us frankly their ambition for their boy and what they honestly believe they are capable of doing; we want letters from their school teachers and from some business people in the neighborhoods where they live, and we would like to have letters also from the pastors of churches where their parents and themselves are attendants.

After we receive these letters we will pick out the best and then write to those we want to see at our offices. We will be fair and just in our selection—fair to the fine boys that are now with us, because we want them to have the right kind of associates—and just to all who make applications. We try to teach our boys the principles of good conduct, loyalty in service, carefulness in money matters, because we think these three elements are necessary to success.

We are very proud of the boys who are associated with Henry L. Doherty & Co., because they are keen about learning all they can—because they are anxious to do a full day's work—and because most of them see the real need of putting aside a part of the money they earn and investing it wisely, which the house helps them to do.

If parents of boys reading this advertisement feel, as we do, that there is a real opportunity for them if they can secure a connection with Henry L. Doherty & Co., then please write (DO NOT CALL) to Employment Department, CARE OF HENRY L. DOHERTY & COMPANY, 60 WALL STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

SALESMEN.

On Jan. 3 we announced in the leading New York papers the start of our sales campaign—a campaign that is destined to write a chapter in the History of Selling which will be read throughout the national selling fraternity.

We have secured, through our initial advertising, a large body of as high type salesmen as can be found in any selling organization in this city. The "reaction" of these men to our proposition was as INSTANTANEOUS as it was FAVORABLE. The enthusiasm of these men and the steadily increasing BUSINESS they are daily bringing in is sufficient evidence of their sincere belief that this is the type of proposition that comes to every man—ONCE.

We are building a national sales organization to market

the new dry cleaner, which as it cleans renders articles to which it is applied MOISTURE-PROOF.

Backed by a national advertising campaign, the start of which will appear shortly in the New York papers, every department store, drug store, hardware store, mail order house, &c., &c., is a prospective dealer and EVERY man or woman a prospective purchaser.

If you feel you have the POTENTIAL ability and only need the RIGHT PROPOSITION to bring it out—and if you are willing to WORK, we offer you

1. An opportunity to make from $8,000 to $20,000 in commissions this year.
2. To those who "make good" a permanent connection such as would take ten to fifteen years to secure with the average proposition.
3. An association with some of the best known business men in New York City.
4. The right kind of CO-OPERATION—including REAL "leads"—that are bringing in the orders.

(And Executives).

The Corporation inserting this advertisement wishes to connect with a limited number of men who have a talent for selling, a mood for honest trading and an ambition to make real money in a fine field. With ample resources and exceptional personnel in management, we have begun the manufacture of a product which meets an insistent need in the life of every man and woman who can read and write.

This product, which is protected by world-wide patents, is nothing less than a sensation in its line. In a neighboring city of 40,000 inhabitants 100 per cent. of the dealers visited have given us their signed orders.

We are about to begin an extensive newspaper advertising campaign in New York City and its environs. Naturally, we want big men to assist us in meeting the demands of the market here and abroad, and we are prepared to pay such men from $5,000 to $15,000 annually in cash commissions and bonuses. You don't need to have experience in this particular field—but you do need to be the right kind of a man.

In replying to this announcement please answer the following questions: How old are you? What is your nationality? What has been your selling experience thus far? What were your annual average earnings during the past three years? You need not send references. If your letter interests us you can bring them with you at an interview which will be arranged by appointment.

You may possibly solve the problem of your business future by answering this advertisement today. Address H 575 Times.

SALESMEN.

The "seven lean years" have passed. We are now about to enter upon the "seven years of plenty."

All important authorities are agreed that a long era of commercial and financial prosperity is ahead.

Are YOU going to get YOUR SHARE of this prosperity? Will you be on the road to "Easy Street" by 1923—or will you be holding down the same old job, trying to make ends meet?

Have you the courage to grab an opportunity? If so, your future is assured. Financial salesmanship never offered such reward as will come to the men who have courage and vision RIGHT NOW.

The commission earnings of investment salesmen are much larger than the earnings of any other class of salesmen. Men who can measure up to a high standard of character and personality will find here such an opportunity as they have long sought where they can build FOR THEMSELVES a permanent and profitable business.

Men with successful experience in other lines can be quickly adapted to the security business, and the invariable record of such men is that they make more money than they have been able to make in any other line. Many have doubled and trebled their previous earnings.

Write today, outlining your qualifications, or telephone Murray Hill 1228 for special appointment.

SALESMEN ON ALUMINUM WARE, FOR 1921.

The AMERICAN ALUMINUM COMPANY of St. Louis and New York is now completing its selling organization for this year.

A few good territories are still open and to fill these applications are invited from high grade specialty salesmen accustomed to earning large compensations. We shall be especially glad to receive letters from salesmen with actual aluminum ware experience. To such men, if capable and with good record, we can offer an unusually good proposition.

Our company is one of the largest operators in the aluminum ware field, with wide and varied line of almost 600 different items. We have many exclusive special merchandising plans and selling features which are a great aid to our representatives in making large sales. Compensation is on a commission basis with liberal drawing account to producers.

Apply by letter giving all particulars, which will be held in strictest confidence, to Mr. John J. Carkoff, Eastern District Manager, American Aluminum Company, 1,133 Broadway, New York City. A personal interview will be granted to those applicants whose letters impress us favorably.

HIGH GRADE MEN KNOW THAT:

"The mills of God grind slowly,
But they grind exceeding small;
Though with patience He stands waiting,
With exactness grinds He all."

No one can defeat Nature's law of compensation, which brings to each in time his own.

His own is that which he deserves.

Life's rich rewards go to doers, not to promisers.

It is the tragedy of progress that a man must make good or make room.

Men of this type are always in demand, whether the office boy or the highest paid executive.

We have opportunities in practically every line of endeavor in all grades, from lowest to highest.

If seeking a new connection, we may be of service to you.

Instruction.

A SHORT CUT TO A SUCCESSFUL CAREER.
Instruction that enables you to fill a high-salaried position is yours through our Personal Instruction Night Classes in TRAFFIC MANAGEMENT.
No lecture or correspondence school methods here, but individual and practical training by expert traffic men, through actual use of tariffs, classifications, rates, routing, shipments, handling claims, transportation, domestic import and export shipping. A complete education, making possible your successfully holding down a responsible position. Classes starting now.
INDUSTRIAL TRAFFIC MANAGERS COLLEGE OF NEW YORK, 2008 Tribune Bldg., 154 Nassau St.
TELEPHONE BEEKMAN 930.

A SHORT CUT TO ACCOUNTANCY SUCCESS.
Five months will qualify you as a junior accountant and twelve months as a senior accountant if you have a grammar school education and ability with figures.
This quick result can be accomplished by the La Salle Problem Method, because the student is given enough theory and a great deal of practical work on problems lifted bodily from actual business, instead of being given much theory and little practical work.
If you're big enough for a bigger position than you are holding, get the facts about this Problem Method by calling for a personal talk, or phone or write.
LA SALLE EXTENSION UNIVERSITY, 112 West 42d St., New York. Bryant 8020. Downtown Office, Suite 810, 111 Broadway, Rector 1801.

DELANEY PROTESTS I.R.T. PROPAGANDA AS OPERATING COST

Commissioner Says Part of $423,000 Charge Was Used in Move to Increase Fares.

OBJECTS TO OTHER FEES

Includes Payments to Extend Public Service Commission's Jurisdiction.

MILLER PLAN TO GO THROUGH

Republican Leaders Decide to Ignore Legislators From New York City and Pass Bills.

A statement prepared by John H. Delaney, Transit Construction Commissioner, accuses the Interborough Rapid Transit Company of having charged against the cost of operating its lines expenditures aggregating $423,000 which were for other purposes. A formal protest against this method of bookkeeping has been served upon the company by Mr. Delaney in behalf of the city, which can get no return upon its huge investment in the lines until operating costs are met.

Mr. Delaney says that $181,047.58 of this sum was used by the company in propaganda for an increased fare and for examinations made at the instance of holders of Interborough-Metropolitan and other securities involved in the Interborough system.

Among the items objected to are payments made to Stone & Webster and Price, Waterhouse & Co., engineers and accountants, to the law firms of Nicoll, Anable, Fuller & Sullivan of this city and Hiscock, Doheny, Williams & Cowie of Syracuse, and to Job E. Hedges, receiver of the New York Railways Company. Mr. Delaney says the vouchers indicate the payments were made, among other things, for "thorough consideration of the Brooklyn strike and of the successful unionizing of the Brooklyn roads by the Amalgamated, with the assistance of Hearst and Hylan"; for "examining charges made by Mayor Hylan to the District Attorney of conspiracy between the Interborough Company and its Brotherhood to bring on a strike; also examining various sections of the Penal Code referred to in his communications to the District Attorney with respect to the coercion of public officers."

Other services rendered by the recipients of the protested payments are described in the vouchers thus: "For the purpose of procuring an amendment to the Public Service Commission law extending the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission over the rates, fares and charges filed by agreement with the local authorities" and "for examinations made for the Interborough-Metropolitan 4½ per cent. collateral trust bondholders protective committee, and for similar purposes."

Objects to Auditing Charge.

Mr. Delaney supplements the general explanation of the charges set forth in the vouchers by these details of the items:

"Among these items are two payments of $50,000 each, made in 1919 to Stone & Webster for examining into the financial affairs of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company at the request of Colonel Murphy, Chairman of the Interborough-Metropolitan 4½ per cent. collateral bondholders protective committee. Of this sum, $30,000 was charged to the subway division, and $20,000 to the Manhattan division, on each payment.

"Objection is also made to a $30,000 charge made by the same firm at a later date in connection with the same examination. This payment was divided $18,000 to the subway account, and $12,000 to the Manhattan account, and was made on May 3, 1920.

Similar objection is made to the payment out of operating revenue of the costs of publishing the "Subway Sun," the "Elevated Express" and other propaganda of the same sort for higher fares. "One item of this expense," reads Mr. Delaney's statement, "is a payment of $1,000 monthly to Ivy Lee, 'adviser of public relations,' who supervises the preparation of literature for propaganda purposes."

Among the charges made by Price, Waterhouse & Co. which Mr. Delaney objects to is one of $7,500 for investigating Interborough affairs at the request of the Bondholders' Protective Committee. Other fees of the same company are also protested. Then the statement reads:

"A bill rendered by the firm of Nicoll, Anable, Fuller & Sullivan for $25,000 for services during the year 1919 for 'conferences and consultations with the President, members of the Executive Committee, general attorney, general counsel and other officers, and for advice and opinion on matters affecting the interest of the company, its bondholders and stockholders,' recites that the services consisted 'especially of the following matters':

"Then under the caption, "Campaign for Higher Fares," is a description of the work done by the firm, which included a study of the fare situation in this and other States, examination of the transit question in ten of the more important cities, cost and valuation plans in all of them which might be applied here, and decisions in the various courts of questions bearing upon the jurisdiction of public service commissions over franchises, and whether contracts fixing five cents as a maximum fare charge are binding.

Under the caption "Thompson Investigation" is this description of the services rendered:

"Conferences with officers and direc-

Dean Would Make Bonfire Of All Liberty Bonds

Dr. Joseph French Johnson, Dean of New York University's School of Commerce and Finance, is willing to furnish the first fuel for a public bonfire of Liberty bonds, according to a statement sent out from the University yesterday. In his opinion they would be a fitting sacrifice on the altar of economic readjustment. In suggesting their destruction on a set date by a common agreement, he explained yesterday that they were a liability of the Government, which was but an association of the people, so that all shared equally in that liability. "If all would agree to forget about the final payment," he added, "there would be a great saving in wear and tear from taxes."

The use of Liberty bonds as currency for the purchase of luxuries, the Dean said, was partly the cause for the great rise in prices that came after the armistice and culminated in May, 1920. In spending them on furs, jewelry, automobiles and the like, the people created a false standard of wealth and forced production to such a pitch that it had to tumble.

CUSTOMS MEN HOLD DE COPPET JEWELS

Say Companion of Mme. Sembrich on Aquitania Did Not Declare Gems.

TRACED BY EMPTY BOX

Passenger Ordered to Appear at Custom House Today and Give an Explanation.

The customs officials on duty yesterday at the Cunard pier at West Fourteenth Street when the Aquitania landed her big crowd of passengers seized jewelry valued at between 15,000 and 20,000 francs, or about $1,200 in American money at the present rate of exchange, which was found among the effects of Miss Julie de Coppet, daughter of Mrs. Edward de Coppet of 314 West Eighty-fifth Street. It was said the jewels were not listed on her declaration.

Miss de Coppet shared a suite on the promenade deck of the liner with Mme. Sembrich, the former soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and was returning with her from a trip abroad. Nearly all the passengers had left the ship and were having their baggage examined on the pier, when one of the customs inspectors, who was passing along the "B" deck, noticed a small jewelry box, empty, lying on a settee in one of the staterooms.

Realizing that the box probably had contained jewelry which was in the possession of a recent occupant of the stateroom, he picked it up. On the lid he saw the name of a well-known Paris firm.

The inspector asked the ship's officers who had occupied the room on the voyage. When informed that it had been Miss de Coppet's room he went to the pier and told the customs officer in charge what he had found and that he suspected that the contents were in the possession of the passenger and had not been declared.

When Miss de Coppet was shown the box she admitted having the articles in her possession and handed them to the customs officials. They said the value was between 15,000 and 20,000 francs, so far as they could judge without having the advice of an expert.

The jewels were retained by the customs officers and Miss de Coppet was permitted to go to her home.

She was instructed to appear at the law department in the Custom House today and explain why she had dutiable articles in her possession without declaring them on the ship before arrival as the revenue laws provide.

All Miss de Coppet would say when questioned about the jewelry was that her brother knew all about the matter and would appear with her today at the Custom House.

The customs officers said the jewelry consisted of earrings, brooches and rings.

Miss de Coppet's father died on May 1, 1916 leaving his entire estate of $1,476,585 to his son Andre de Coppet, the brother referred to by her in regard to the jewels. He was of Swiss descent and kept up a summer home on Lake Geneva. Mr. de Coppet was a patron of music and was the founder of the Flonzaley Quartet. He was a banker and the senior partner in the Stock Exchange firm of De Coppet & Doremus.

12 DEAD IN HOTEL FIRE; TWO INQUIRIES BEGUN IN HOBOKEN

Police Seek Cause of Blaze While Prosecutor Investigates Conduct of Hostelry.

SEVEN BODIES IDENTIFIED

Shoes, Rings and Scorched Remnants of Clothing Give Clues in Several Cases.

WOMAN DIES IN HOSPITAL

Flames Believed to Have Started in Room Shortly After Couple Had Given It Up.

With twelve lives as the toll of the tragedy, an investigation was begun yesterday to learn the cause of the fire which swept the Hotel Colonial, 39-41 Newark Street, Hoboken, early yesterday. A second inquiry, to be conducted by Prosecutor of the Pleas Pierre P. Garven of Jersey City will determine the manner in which the hotel was conducted.

The bodies of four victims were identified at Bosworth's Morgue, where hundreds, unable to recognize charred remains, sought to identify the dead through some garment or trinket gathered up by police and firemen. Throughout the day an anxious throng stood about the morgue. Another group stood in front of the four-story structure in Newark Street, its front, except for a few broken windows, giving no hint of the destruction within.

Woman Dies in Hospital.

Of the five who were removed to hospitals, Mrs. Mary Schumaker, 42, of 217 Second Street, Jersey City, died in St. Mary's Hospital, Hoboken, at 7 o'clock last night. Others are near death at St. Mary's. The known dead are:

GREY, Miss DAISY, 27, 321 Pacific Avenue, Jersey City, a divorcee, formerly Mrs. Charles May.
LOGAN, FRANK, 36, 221 First Street, Hoboken, married.
LINEE, HERMAN, 32, 519 Grove Street, Irvington, N. J.
PETERSON, Miss HESTER CONSTANCE, 26, 539 Fortieth Street, Brooklyn.
RIKER, JOSEPH, 29, 109 Oak Street, Jersey City.
SNIDER, E. G., 560 Fifty-second Street, foreman of air brake inspectors of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Railroad.
SCHUMAKER, Mrs. MARY, 217 Second Street, Jersey City, died in St. Mary's Hospital.

The Injured.

GIERKSEN, RICHARD, dishwasher at the Hotel Colonial; mentally deranged from burns and shock; probably will recover from the burns; St. Mary's Hospital.
KAEHLER, BLANCHE, 76 Maderson Street, Jersey City; not expect to recover; St. Mary's Hospital.
RIDER, JOSIAH, 1,750 Boulevard, Jersey City; not likely to recover; St. Mary's Hospital.

Five Bodies Unidentified.

Following are partial descriptions of the unidentified bodies at Bosworth's Morgue:

WOMAN, about 23 years old, five feet eight inches tall, brown hair, good teeth, wearing cameo ring on forefinger of right hand and diamond cluster ring in Tiffany setting on engagement finger.
MAN, about 40 years old, five feet six inches tall, weighing about 160 pounds, gray eyes, black hair, partly bald, good teeth, gray union underwear.
WOMAN, about 40 years old, five feet seven inches tall, weighing 180 pounds, brown or auburn hair, gold capped teeth right and left upper jaw, gold ring set with white stones on third finger of left hand.
MAN, five feet nine inches tall, weighing about 150 pounds, eyes and hair badly burned. Bridgework containing four plain and three gold capped teeth in upper jaw.
WOMAN, five feet eight inches tall, weighing 150 pounds, hair burned off, gold bridgework on upper jaw containing five teeth, one broken tooth in left lower jaw.

Fire Starts in Unoccupied Room.

The fire, according to the best information obtainable, started in Room 12, one flight up, across an areaway from the linen room, and not far from the desk. This room had been occupied by a couple that left the hotel in the evening.

"The night clerk, George Groll, called me on the house telephone at 11:35 o'clock last night," Henry Scharshing, manager of the Colonial, told the police. "Groll had discovered the fire and sent John Ross, the night man, to notify the policeman on post. I phoned Fire

Wilson Preparing for Book on Peace; Ray S. Baker Arranging the Paris Data

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30 (Associated Press).—President Wilson is having collected and arranged for ready reference all papers and documents in his possession relating to the Paris Peace Conference with a view to the preparation of a book on the negotiations.

The President, in making these preparations, it was learned today, has accepted the volunteered services of Ray Stannard Baker, who was attached to the American Peace Commission. Mr. Baker during the last two weeks has spent several hours each day at the White House putting in shape available data on the Peace Conference in the President's possession.

While it is not believed that the President contemplates beginning the actual work of writing or dictating the proposed book during the few remaining weeks of his term of office, it is understood that he has in mind the inauguration of real work upon it shortly after his retirement to private life. It is known that Mr. Baker has undertaken only the task of arranging the material and that his duties do not include in any way the literary workmanship.

Friends of the President are understood to have urged upon him for some time past the desirability of recording from the viewpoint of an official American participant events of such monumental importance as took place in Paris during the peace negotiations. They have pointed out that one who played such a major rôle as he, and whose decisions later became the subject of such violent controversy, both in the United States and abroad, could not afford to lose the opportunity of setting before the world the motives behind the many disputed decisions involving Shantung, Fiume, Danzig, the Anglo-French-American alliance and the Russian question.

Officials close to the President have said recently that whatever he might write after his retirement from the White House would not be autobiographical in form, as his preference has always been toward history as a form of literary expression.

One version of the events which took place in Paris from an official American viewpoint is already in course of publication. Announcement was made several weeks ago that former Secretary of State Lansing, one of the American Commissioners, had prepared a book which takes issue in several important chapters with decisions made by the President. This book is to be released to the public on March 5, the day after President Wilson retires from office.

Naval Guard Kills Officer of Navy on Failure to Halt

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 30.—A sentry at the naval base saw a closed automobile passing along one of the driveways inside the Government reservation tonight. He called to the driver to "Halt." The car kept going.

The sentry challenged a second time, but the car did not stop. The sentry fired, a woman screamed and the car stopped.

When the sentry went up to the car he found Lieut. C. S. Taylor, U. S. N., of the Medical Corps, dead inside the car. There was a bullet wound in his right cheek.

Captain Price, commanding officer at the base, refused to give out any of the details of the shooting tonight. He said he would make his report public tomorrow.

Lieutenant Taylor is the second man injured lately at the base. A citizen, for failing to get off the grass when ordered to do so, was clubbed with the butt of a gun by a sentry and had to be sent to a hospital.

It is said sentries have orders to shoot when they challenge twice. Lieutenant Taylor, in a closed car with the engine running, probably did not hear the sentry when he called to him to halt.

FALL NOW PICKED FOR CABINET SLATE

Harding Still Undecided on Secretaries of Navy, Commerce and Labor.

MEN OF WORLD VIEW URGED

Denied That Banks Aiding Party Loan Influence the Selections.

Special to The New York Times.

MIAMI, Fla., Jan. 30.—President-elect Harding's Cabinet slate is understood to contain now the name of Senator Albert B. Fall of New Mexico, for Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Fall left here with the President-elect this afternoon on a two days' fishing expedition to Caesar's Island, about thirty miles distant. Before he left the Senator from New Mexico had nothing to say about having been mentioned for the Cabinet. It was learned, however, from sources close to Mr. Harding that Senator Fall in all probability will be considered the Southern representative in the Cabinet and that he has displaced Herbert Hoover in the President-elect's consideration for Secretary of the Interior.

When Mr. Fall was invited to accompany Mr. Harding on Senator Frelinghuysen's houseboat, the Victoria, it was generally understood that one result of the cruise would be to decide whether he would be invited to the Cabinet.

With Fall now on the tentative slate for Secretary of the Interior, it is believed that four or five others are virtually certain of invitations to the Cabinet. These are Charles Evans Hughes for Secretary of State, Harry M. Daugherty for Attorney General, John W. Weeks for Secretary of War and Henry C. Wallace for Secretary of Agriculture.

In the absence of any further developments in the Senatorial opposition to Mr. Hughes and the urging of Elihu Root for Secretary of State, it is believed that the President-elect is no longer considering switching Mr. Hughes to the Department of Justice and transferring Mr. Daugherty to the Post Office Department in order to make room for Mr. Root. This continues Will H. Hays as the most formidable candidate for Postmaster General. Those who have talked over Cabinet matters with Mr. Harding in Miami and believe that Charles G. Dawes of Chicago is foremost in the President-elect's consideration for Secretary of the Treasury.

This leaves Mr. Harding's mind still open in regard to the Secretaries of the Navy, Commerce and Labor. It is generally accepted that he will appoint a representative of organised labor of the more conservative type to the last-named Cabinet post.

Mr. Harding has been strongly urged to appoint a few individuals possessing the "international viewpoint" to the Cabinet. This advice has come to him not only from Republicans, but Democrats who occupied important executive positions during the war have written to him upon this subject.

Fred M. Upham, Treasurer of the Republican National Committee, backer of Dawes and opponent of Wadsworth, has urged Mr. Harding to appoint Albert Lasker, head of the Chicago advertising agency of Lord & Thomas, as Secretary of Commerce, but the selection of Dawes is believed to be more probable, in view of the geographical considerations that enter into Cabinet building, or Mr. Lasker being selected for this post.

A number of those who would have Mr. Harding appoint men with the "international viewpoint" favor Mr. Dawes for the Cabinet, either as Secretary of the Treasury or of Commerce. His banking experience and his record abroad as head of the purchasing department of the American Expeditionary Forces are regarded by his backers as qualifying him for either post.

Disclosures that the Republican campaign deficit of more than $1,500,000 has been underwritten through loans by various banks throughout the country, are declared to have little effect upon the President-elect in his consideration of Cabinet appointments. Those close to Mr. Harding have taken the position that Mr. Upham would find no difficulty in having the deficit underwritten.

Mr. Harding, Senators Frelinghuysen and Fall, Harry M. Daugherty, Henry P. Fletcher, Dr. Ely, Mr. Upham and two secret service men left Miami Beach this afternoon for the Cocobolo Club, a fishing group of less than a dozen members, on Cesar's Island, the refuge of "Black Cesar," the last pirate to be put out of business by the Government.

The President-elect spent a part of this morning with his correspondence and then appeared in a bathing suit at Miami Beach at the moon bathing hour. He had luncheon at the Flamingo Hotel and before leaving for the Cocobolo Club he motored to Miami and paid a return call upon William Jennings Bryan.

A. T. WHITE DROWNS IN FOREST LAKE; PIONEER IN CHARITY

Wealthy Merchant, Model Tenement Builder, Falls Through Ice While Skating.

FOUND AFTER LONG SEARCH

Sportsman of 75 Fails to Meet Brother at Inn After Starting on Jaunt.

BEGAN CAREER IN 1866

Established First Home at Seaside for Poor Children—Founded Brooklyn Charities.

Alfred Treadway White, wealthy merchant and philanthropist, was drowned Saturday evening, while skating on Forest Lake, near the home of Mrs. E. H. Harriman in the hills above Central Valley, N. Y. After an all-night search, the body was recovered yesterday by a searching party led by W. Averell Harriman, and it was brought back last night to Mr. White's home at 40 Remsen Street, Brooklyn.

At noon on Saturday, Mr. White, who was ardently devoted to outdoor sports, despite his seventy-five years, left his office at 14 Wall Street with his brother, William Augustus White, also a member of the firm of W. A. & A. M. White. Mr. White had been looking forward keenly to an opportunity to get to the country for skating and he suggested to his brother that they go up to Central Valley and motor over to Forest Lake.

They registered at the Forest Lake Inn and took a long jaunt through the countryside. At about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, William Augustus White said he was tired and would return to the Inn. He said his brother decided to continue the walk, agreeing to rejoin his companion at the Inn later.

Search Parties Out All Night.

When night came on and the elderly philanthropist failed to appear at the Inn, searching parties were organized to scour the woods that extend for five miles between the Inn and the lake. Word was carried to the Harriman estate, and W. Averell Harriman, enlisting keepers and household servants, joined the quest.

Time and again, the searchers, knowing that Mr. White had carried a pair of skates, circled the lake, thinly crusted with ice. It was not, however, until just before 6 o'clock yesterday morning that an object was noticed floating in a hole in the ice. The opening in the ice was about forty feet out from the shore and several men, roped together and fastened to those on the shore, cautiously made their way out. They found Mr. White's hat in the hole and the marks of skates on the edge. Servants were sent to the Harriman house for grappling irons and several hours later the body was recovered.

Mr. White, who was deeply interested in the housing problems of the poor, began a mercantile career in Wall Street in 1866, twenty years after his birth in Brooklyn. He had been educated as a civil engineer at the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute and at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy.

In 1872 he began his study of the housing problem, then a serious one in this city, and in 1876 constructed the first successful tenement houses in this country, following these with similar structures in 1877, 1878 and 1890. In the latter year, Harvard University bestowed on him the honorary degree of Master of Arts, in recognition of his work for housing reform.

Founded Home for Poor Children.

In 1876 he became a pioneer in one field of philanthropy, establishing the first seaside home for the Summer relief of the children of the slums. He was one of the organizers of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities, was its President for twenty-five years and continued up to the present as its Secretary. He was a Director of the Brooklyn Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and, since 1868, a Director of the Brooklyn Children's Aid Society.

In 1893 Mr. White was appointed by Mayor Schieren Commissioner of City Works of Brooklyn, holding the post two years. He then was appointed a member of the Tenement House Commission. He was the author of several books on housing.

During the war he was prominent in the activities of the Brooklyn Chapter of the American Red Cross, of which he had been a chief figure for years. He served for a while as a member of the Executive Committee of the national relief organization. He was also active in the New York Chamber of Commerce and in the Century, Groller, Down Town, Hamilton and Engineers clubs.

Mr. White was married in 1878 to Miss Annie Jean Lyman of Brooklyn. Mrs. White died in May, 1920. They had two children, Miss Katherine Lyman White, who married Henry B. Van Sinderen and whose death occurred two years ago, and Miss Annie Jean White, the wife of Adrian Van Sinderen.

It is understood that the funeral probably will take place from the Unitarian Church of the Savior in Pierrepont Street, Brooklyn.

ALLIED REPARATION TERMS BAR GERMANY FROM NEGOTIATING A LOAN ABROAD; WARNED AGAINST DISARMAMENT DELAY

14,000,000,000 Marks in New Capital Put Into German Enterprises Last Year

Copyright, 1921, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Jan. 30.—All Government circles profess to regard the Paris decision on reparations with incredulity and amazement and declare payment of such amounts beyond the country's capacity.

Though it seems somewhat premature the opinion is freely expressed that the Government will take no step that could be interpreted as assenting to the proposals as they stand and simply allow things to take their course. Practically all sections of press reflect these opinions.

Meantime people who have money do not seem to be alarmed. Statistics for the last year just completed show that the gigantic sum of 14,000,000,000 marks was forthcoming in new capital mainly for industrial concerns here. On the very day it was announced that Germany was going to be strangled the Daimler Motor Company decided to increase its capital by exactly doubling it, and Herr Stinnes this morning got himself elected Director of the Esplanade Hotel, presumably to be on the spot when it is "plundered."

It is all very puzzling.

GERMAN PRESS URGES RESISTANCE

Says Maniacs Who Call Themselves Statesmen Have Decided on Germany's Perdition.

PREDICTS DIRE RESULTS

All European Countries East of Its Borders to Go Down in Fatherland's Collapse.

Copyright, 1921, by The New York Times Company.
By Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Jan. 30.—The effect of the news from the Paris Conference manifests itself here in a dangerous spirit of pessimism and despair, fed by the newspapers of all political shades, which seek to convince the people that a lot of maniacs who call themselves statesmen have decided on Germany's perdition even at the risk of their own nations sharing more or less her death agony.

It is argued that Germany's economical destruction, which is considered unavoidable if the plans and decision of the Paris Conference are put into practice, will unfeilingly cause the destruction of all the European countries east of Germany, the well-being of which is inseparably bound up with the fate of the largest industrial and mercantile State of Central Europe, and that the catastrophe resulting will have a speedy and terrible effect on France and England, which provoked it so frivolously.

"We cannot see what distinguishes the present insane proposition of extorting 226,000,000,000 gold, or many thousand billions of paper marks, from Germany from Doumer's insane proposition of yesterday, which was so obstinately opposed by Lloyd George," comments Vorwärts, and it refuses to discuss even the possibility of such payments.

"The result of the Paris Conference," it goes on, "is merely that Briand's Cabinet is saved and that Lloyd George may be spared Lord Northcliffe's torments for a few weeks. And Europe? And the German laboring classes, which in these last two years have achieved a gigantic task and are in a most miserable condition, hoping for better days? And the unemployed crisis in the whole world? Can it be solved by eliminating the whole of Central and Eastern Europe as consumers?"

The Tageblatt declares it is not astonished at Lloyd George's submission to French dictation, because he has always submitted, and one must wonder at the fact that the rest of the world regards him as a strong, inflexible leader of men. Replying to Briand's contention that Germany is prosperous and France needy, the Tageblatt remarks:

"It is indeed an undignified spectacle that this victorious nation, for lack of organizing talent and other qualifications, is unable to put its gigantic gains to any profitable use and prefers to bemoan its misery rather than get up and do something other than continuing its extortions. The Entente's demands are so grotesque we cannot seriously consider them. In view of this most undignified spectacle offered by the Entente, Germany can only shrug her shoulders and leave Lloyd George and Briand to see what they can get themselves."

The Deutsche Zeitung, the most reactionary organ, says:

"For once we agree with the Tageblatt that Germany must never promise to pay such sums, but let the Entente find out what it can do against the resistance of the whole German people."

The Lokal-Anzeiger comments:

"Here we can only apply the doctrine uttered by our Foreign Minister, Dr. Simons, a few days ago in the Reichstag: Unjust dictates are preferable to unfulfillable promises. We know this view is shared by the whole German people without distinction of parties and for this reason any further discussion is unnecessary."

BERLIN, Jan. 30 (Associated Press).—"The Treaty of Versailles deprives us of our sovereignty in military matters. We consider that equivalent to the imposition of an exceptive law and are under the belief that such restriction can be of short duration," said Herr Geesler, Minister of Defense, during the course of a debate in the Reichstag yesterday on the military budget.

The Minister said Germany would welcome world-wide disarmament, but, he added, she now beholds the States about her feverishly engaged in arming.

"The army system we have been forced to adopt is not suited to our needs," he declared. "We require a militia to build up a short service plan."

TEXT OF ALLIED NOTE SENT TO GERMANY

In Presenting Disarmament Demand Prompt Compliance Is Urged.

CHANCE TO CUT INDEMNITY

Discounts to be Allowed on Advance Payments — Lien on Nation's Assets.

PARIS, Jan. 30.—The document signed by the Supreme Council of the Allies last night by which the reparations and disarmament decisions of the Allies will be conveyed to Germany, was delivered today to Charles Bergmann, German Under Secretary of State for the Treasury and head of the German delegation in Paris, with a letter of transmittal marked "confidential." The letter, with two notes on reparations and disarmament, totals 2,500 words.

The letter of transmittal, which is dated Jan. 29, reads:

"Sir: The Allied Conference which met in Paris from the 24th to the 29th of January, 1921, has taken the following decisions:

"1. As regards the disarmament of Germany, the allied governments have approved the conclusions formulated in the note attached hereto.

"2. As regards the question of reparations, the allied Governments have unanimously approved the proposals formulated in that document, also attached hereto.

"The allied Governments have on former occasions and again today, in consenting to fresh delays in the matter of disarmament, had due regard to the difficulties that surround the German Government in the execution of the obligations which have resulted from the Treaty of Versailles. They have formed the hope that the German Government will not place the Allies, who confirm their previous decisions, under the necessity of envisaging the grave situation which will be created if Germany persists in failing to meet her obligations.

"Qualified delegates of the German Government will be invited to a meeting in London at the end of February with delegates of the allied Governments."

Text of Reparations Note.

The reparations note bears the title "An agreement between the allied Powers for the settlement of certain questions relating to execution of the Treaty of Versailles." The note reads:

"Article 1—For the purpose of satisfying the obligations imposed upon her by Articles 231 and 232 of the Treaty of Versailles, Germany shall, irrespective of the restitution she is to make under Article 238 and of any other obligation under the treaty, pay:

"1. Fixed annuities payable half-yearly in equal parts, as follows: (a) Two annuities of 2,000,000,000 gold marks from May 1, 1921, to May 1, 1923; (b) three annuities of 3,000,000,000 gold marks from May 1, 1923, to May 1, 1926; (c) three annuities of 4,000,000,000 gold marks from May 1, 1926, to May 1, 1929; (d) three annuities of 5,000,000,000 gold marks from May 1, 1929, to May 1, 1932; (e) thirty-one annuities of 6,000,000,000 gold marks from May 1, 1932, to May 1, 1963.

"2. Forty-one annuities running from May 1, 1921, equal in amount to 12 per cent. ad valorem of German exports, payable in gold two months after the close of each half year.

"In order to insure complete fulfillment of Paragraph 2 above, Germany will give to the Reparations Commission every facility for verifying the amount of the German exports and for the establishment of the supervision necessary for this purpose.

"Article 2. The German Government will transmit forthwith to the Reparations Commission notes to bearer payable at the dates specified in Article 1, Paragraph 1 of the present arrangement. The amount of these notes shall be equivalent to each of the half-yearly sums payable under said paragraph.

"Instructions shall be given to the Reparations Commission with a view to facilitating realization by the powers which so demand the share to be attributed to them in accordance with the agreements in force between them.

PARIS, Jan. 30.—Under the reparations agreement reached by the Allies neither the German Central Government, nor the Governments of the German States, nor German municipalities, nor State-controlled public services may borrow money either in the United States or other countries without the consent of the Reparations Commission. This means that Germany could offer America as security for any loan only such guarantees as the Allies saw fit to allow.

What effect any provisions of a separate peace between Washington and Berlin might have on this clause is at present problematical. It may be mentioned that the Germans are to go to London on Feb. 28 to meet the Allies, who will endeavor to obtain German consent to their reparations plan. This conference is naturally intended to bear fruit at a date prior to that on which the new American Administration could negotiate any accord with Germany.

The important provision mentioned is contained in Article 4 of the reparations plan, which reads:

"Germany will proceed directly or indirectly to no operation of credit outside her territory without approval of the Commission on Reparations. This provision applies to the Government of the German Empire, to the Governments of the German States, to provincial authorities or German municipalities as well as to corporations or enterprises controlled by said Governments and authorities."

Say Germany Must Take or Leave It.

According to the allied chiefs, Germany will be told in London that she can take or leave the new scheme. In other words, she will not be allowed to discuss any changes in it, but only ways of carrying it out. Inasmuch as the only alternative plan is to notify Germany that she owes the Reparations Commission the figure of 400,000,000,000 marks in gold, one may, in view of the difficulties of the latter plan, take with a grain of salt the allied chiefs' declaration.

If Germany agreed with the plan and signed the undertaking not to seek any loan in America without consent of the Allies, she would be bound under penalties not to do so. However, if she refused to accept Article 4, among others, it might change the aspect of the situation, although it is true that the Versailles Treaty in general terms permits of a construction giving the Allies control over the contracting of loans by Germany.

The German Ambassador to Paris today forwarded to Berlin the Allies' plan on reparations and their orders on disarmament. The Germans have no opportunity to argue over the disarmament decisions. They may answer at once or wait until Feb. 28 to reply on the reparations plan.

In the operation of the allied plan to collect 12 per cent. on German exports to America, with other countries, will be asked to supply figures on importations from Germany. These figures are to be used to check up the German figures. But, inasmuch as the United States publishes its import figures, there should be no difficulty on this score.

Before leaving for London Premier Lloyd George was asked about plans for arranging the allied debts. He replied that the subject would be taken up as soon as America could be got to discuss arrangements for the debts of the Allies toward her. "If my creditor does not press me, I will not press my debtor," was the way Mr. Lloyd George put it.

Despite statements published in the French press today, the text of the note to the Germans shows that the official draft of the reparations plan makes no mention of military penalties. It is true the Allies have the right to select the German Receiver of Customs and to take over the customs, if the Germans do not pay the tax, but there is no mention of seizure of the Ruhr or any such step. That is because, as has been explained in these dispatches, the Allies have no right under the treaty to formulate threats to enforce the forty-two annual payments, since the treaty says the German debt shall be acquitted in thirty years. It is only after Germany agrees to the forty-two-year plan that military penalties can be provided.

Although there is much complaint in French political circles over the fact that the new plan needs German assent, it appears today entirely likely that when he goes before the Chamber on Tuesday Premier Briand will receive a acquiescence. If that consent is not obtained, or obtained only at the price of important concessions, his fate may be different.

It is significant that former President Poincaré in an article The Matin will publish tomorrow does not attack the agreement, although he does not praise it. M. Poincaré is the man who will probably become Premier if M. Briand should be thrown out. His article is entitled "Poor Germany!" He reviews the storm of protest already coming from across the Rhine, and, in the bitter sarcasm of which he is a master, laments her fate and then asks whose fault it is.

He laments the terrible hard luck of Germany in having to give up Alsace-Lorraine, and says it is a dire fate which compels the international brigand to have to disarm.

"Germany complains of her misery," he writes, "as if she were not the sole artisan of it. Poor Germany! She fell upon Belgium and upon France to seize for herself Antwerp, Briey, Toul and Verdun. She expended billions to destroy our cities, to flood our mines, to ravage our forests. She shot innocent French people, led away women as hostages, condemned thousands of young people to humiliating labor. And now, that she is, as she says, ruined in this dark of civilizing Europe, she implores her victims to give up their claims against her. Poor, poor Germany!"

He than reviews the enormous appropriations in the 1920 German budget and quotes scores of authorities of the Reich proving her economic recovery. He says the new arrangement would give France far from what she deserves, and emphasizes the difficulties of applying it.

"Let us hope that in return for these enormous sacrifices we can at least reach agreements with our Allies as to financial arrangements which will get for us the immediate funds we need. Let us hope that the penalties will not be simply words written on paper, but that they will be applied when needed.

"And above all let us with our Allies in united front be inviolate against the counter propositions which the Germans already promise to bring to us. If we do not do this, it will be proved that it is not France, but Germany, who will profit from this plan. Poor Germany!"

This declaration by M. Poincaré illustrates what I mentioned, namely, that his faction in the Chamber will not stand for any deviation from the provisions of the new proposed compact. But can Germany be got to accept it without changes? There rests the problem of reparations.

BRITISH GRATIFIED AT ALLIED UNITY

Newspapers Agree It Must Continue If Germany Is to Be Made to Pay.

Copyright, 1921, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, Jan. 31.—"From the viewpoint of allied agreement, the Paris conference has been a signal success," says The Daily Chronicle, whose opinion is shared by most of the other papers. They insist, however, that this agreement must be maintained if Germany is to be made to pay. "It was to be expected of the German nature," says The Daily Chronicle, "that it would protest with violence against the terms, whatever they might be. If the Allies stand firm by their 'sanctions,' this bluster will abate."

The Daily Mail says:

"The sooner Germany pays, the better for her and the Allies. Pay she will if the Allies compel her. There will be no serious resistance if the allied Governments remain united and act up to their declared convictions that their close union can alone insure peace as it alone insured victory. Of all the results of the Paris conference, the best is the proof that if they will the allied Governments can agree. The sequel must show that after agreeing they can continuously act in agreement. German and pro-German efforts again to divide them will not be lacking. Such efforts will be constant and insidious."

The Daily News says:

"Agreement of the Allies, whatever criticism may properly be made of the terms on which it is based, is a security for peace and at least a promise of the end of the mist of uncertainties which has hung over Europe like a foul fog. Had they failed out the situation would be almost hopeless. Whatever the German papers may say in their haste, the immediate pressure of the revised scheme on Germany ought not to be crushing. That is much more than half the battle, and if the Germans are well advised they will recognise it.

"One danger which they, and for that matter the civilized world, had to guard against was that immediate demands might be made upon Germany which would have crushed out all hope of her industrial revival. We do not think this can possibly be said of the Paris demands and the morrow, especially the morrow forty-two years hence, will take care of the things of itself."

The Morning Post says:

"The success or failure of the new scheme will, of course, depend upon factors which probably were present in the minds of the conference when the agreement was reached. The reparations made by Germany cannot be dissociated in their financial bearing from such vital questions as interallied indebtedness, the debts of France to Great Britain and, above all, the debts due by the Allies to the United States. The presence of Sir Auckland Geddes at these deliberations may be taken as proof that the United States was not forgotten in these deliberations."

The Daily Telegraph says:

"We are committed to partnership in a colossal financial undertaking, and we shall lose our money if we do not work and act together. It cannot be supposed that the Germans and their Government will pay over the large sums now demanded from them without reluctance. It is quite probable that they will not pay at all except under stringent compulsion. The Allies must decide in detail on the steps they will take to enforce Germany's submission in case she proves recalcitrant.

"The Paris agreement will be only another scrap of paper if the Germans can ignore or evade it. Germany's creditors must be in a position to levy execution upon her premises at any time during the next forty-two years if instalments of the debt are in arrears. We cannot expect that the Germans will resign themselves to redeeming their liability without a struggle."

While all the foregoing papers take the line that Germany can pay if she is made to, The Daily Express is severely critical of the terms. It says the figures in the bill to be presented to Germany are "fantastic in their proportions," and it adds:

"The account extends far into the realms of the future. We do not question for a moment the justice of the demand made upon Germany, but we are compelled to doubt Germany's ability to meet it, and if payment can be exacted we are convinced it will be in a form that will do her creditors more harm than good.

"Surrendered German ships as part of the war indemnity are now being dumped on the market at any price that can be obtained, with the result that our shipyards can get no orders and our shipbuilders are unemployed. It is obvious that the bulk of Germany's payments must be in kind, and that the effect of them will be a reduced demand for our own productions. For that reason the process of searching the German pockets to the very bottom appears to us to possess disadvantages which British and French statesmen will do well to take into account."

The Labor paper, The Daily Herald, turns down the Paris agreement as impossible of fulfillment and talks of "allied lunatics in Paris" going in for "madhouse economics." It says:

"Is it possible to ignore the fact that, so far as any one has been able to ascertain, there are not enough gold marks in the whole of Germany to pay even the first year's instalment? The Germans, we suppose, are expected to evolve gold out of their inner consciousness. Moreover, if we did take all the gold out of Germany and left that country to reply upon paper currency, the obvious and immediate result would be an inflation of German currency which would make the international situation still more impossible from the point of view of the British workers.

"Obviously, however, what must be meant is not gold but the equivalent of gold. Now, there are only two other ways in which Germany, or any other country, can pay anything—labor and

INDEMNITY EXCEEDS AMERICAN ESTIMATE

Baruch Says Figure Is Close to Maximum Based on Conditions at Time of Treaty.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—Bernard M. Baruch, one of President Wilson's economic advisers at the Paris Peace Conference and also a member of the commission which considered Germany's reparations, who was in Washington today, refused to say definitely whether he considered the German indemnity, in addition to the 12 per cent. export tariff and the amounts already paid on account, as excessive, but left the impression that he considered it very stiff. He made the following statement:

"The 226,000,000,000 of gold marks—roughly $55,000,000,000—is equal to a present cash payment of about $21,000,000,000, which, with interest at 5 per cent., would amount to about $55,000,000,000 in forty-two years. This, plus the amount of money already paid under the treaty, amounting to something over $3,500,000,000, plus the 12 per cent. export tax, will be the amount of Germany's payment under the treaty.

"Whether this is a wise settlement or not will depend upon the spirit in which it is entered into by all the parties to the contract and whether Germany can make the payments. If this will end the war, and each and every one will earnestly strive to make it do, more than the money settlement will be gained.

"America by failing to ratify the treaty removed itself from a participation in this decision although, necessarily, it must be of vital effect to American business.

"The gross sum of 226,000,000,000 of gold marks, if accepted by Germany, will be very close to the maximum amount judged by some of the American delegation that she could pay, but higher than some of the opinions arrived at among the American delegates who participated in the discussions of reparational matters. But this was based upon conditions as they then existed and with the hope that Germany might be allowed to retain a reasonable amount of shipping and with the thought that possibly Silesia would be retained as German and took into consideration the $3,500,000,000 already paid. There was no consideration of an additional export tax.

"In addition the tax of 12 per cent. affords a tariff protection on goods exported from Germany. This is a tax on the American consumer of goods for that portion bought here, but it goes into the treasury of the Allies, after Germany collects it and not into the Treasury of the United States, as would a similar tariff imposed by our own tariff. This tax would have the effect of increasing prices and lessening exports. The wisdom of this action may be open to criticism because of the tendency it would have to lessen the volume of German business and to make the amount somewhat indeterminate.

"If Germany accepts this arrangement in good faith and not because she has to, and if it meets the approval of business men and financiers, there is sure to be an improvement in world-wide economic conditions. There has already been a rise in exchange in anticipation that the settlement would be reasonable. There would be a further rise, with a tendency over a period of time to slowly approach normal. It would increase the credit facilities of all nations involved, improve their buying capacity and their ability to exchange commodities one with another. It would tend to increase the wealth of the world, and, therefore, increase the ability to lessen the percentage of taxation because of the increased taxable volume.

"If Germany accepts voluntarily and proceeds in good faith, and if she can carry out the obligation, there should be a gradual stabilization of economic condition in all Central Europe, which will spread after a time even to Russia, which will mean a slow but sure widening of the markets, and after a while an improvement in the position of the unemployed. It will make it the easier to form some adequate idea as to a system of taxation and give a better judgment as to any tariffs that the party now in power may have in mind. It will also give a better understanding to the allied nations of their ability to meet their indebtedness to us. If acceptable to Germany it is a great step forward—the greatest perhaps with the exception of the adoption by us of the Treaty of Versailles—toward a return to normal conditions."

Lloyd George Back In London.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The Prime Minister, Mr. Lloyd George, returned to London tonight from Paris, where he participated in the work of the Supreme Council of the Allies. He was accompanied by Sir Auckland Geddes, British Ambassador to the United States, who recently was called home to confer with Mr. Lloyd George and Earl Curzon, the Foreign Minister.

erty at any time to make payments in advance on account of the fixed portion of the sum owing.

"Advance payments shall be applied in the reduction of the fixed annuities provided for in the first paragraph of Article 1. For this purpose annuities shall be discounted at the rate of 8 per cent. until May 1, 1923; 6 per cent. from May 1, 1923, to May 1, 1925; 5 per cent. from May 1, 1925.

"Article 4. Germany shall not directly embark on any credit operation outside her own territory without the approval of the Reparations Commission. This provision applies to the Government of the German Empire, to the Governments of German States, to the German provincial and municipal authorities and to any companies or undertakings under control of said Governments or authorities.

Lien on Assets and Revenues.

"Article 5. In pursuance of Article 248 of the Treaty of Versailles all the assets and revenues of the empire and of the German States shall be applicable to insure complete execution by Germany of the provisions of the present arrangement.

"The proceeds of the German maritime and land customs, including in particular the proceeds of all import and export duties and of any tax subsidiary thereto, shall constitute special security for the execution of the present agreement.

"No modifications which might diminish the proceeds of the customs shall be made in the German customs laws or regulations without approval of the Reparations Commission. All German customs receipts shall be encashed on behalf of the German Government by a Receiver General of German Customs appointed by the German Government with the approval of the Reparations Commission.

"In case Germany shall make default in any payment provided for in the present arrangement:

"1. All or part of the proceeds of the German customs in the hands of the Receiver General of German Customs may be attached by the Reparations Commission and applied in meeting the obligations in respect of which Germany has defaulted. In such case the Reparations Commission may, if it thinks necessary, itself undertake the administration and receipt of the customs duties.

"2. The Reparations Commission also may formally invite the German Government to proceed to such increases of duties or to take such steps for the purpose of increasing its resources as the Commission may think necessary."

INDEMNITY TOO HIGH

Total of $25,000,000,000 Paid in Thirty Years Regarded as About All Germany Can Do.

EXPECTS FURTHER REVISION

It Is Pointed Out That Bonds Based on Too Large an Amount Could Not Be Floated Here.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The definite fixation of the financial reparations to be paid by Germany will, in the opinion of American Government officials and financial and economic experts here, contribute more than almost any other factor toward bringing about the financial rehabilitation of the world. But authorities here are not optimistic regarding the result of the plan approved by the Supreme Council of the Allies at Paris for a determination of the German debt.

It is not the conviction of officials who have given close study to the financial and economic consequences of the Paris peace conference that the allied powers have yet reached a financial settlement such as Germany and the rest of the world can regard as possible of being accepted as a permanent plan.

The latest reparations plan of the allied Premiers calls for payment by Germany of 226,000,000,000 gold marks, on an annuity basis, spread over a period of forty-two years, plus an annual tax of 12 per cent. on German exports for a similar period. Payment of an indemnity of 226,000,000,000 gold marks represents something of a reduction from the sum of 400,000,000,000 gold marks originally urged at Paris. It is also a reduction from the sum of 269,000,000,000 gold marks fixed in the Boulogne conference, on the basis of payment of 100,000,000,000 gold marks principal plus 169,000,000,000 gold marks interest.

The sum of 226,000,000,000 gold marks represents the equivalent of about $56,000,000,000 in American gold. While all the details of the plan adopted at Paris yesterday by the Premiers have not been placed in the possession of American officials, expert opinion here is that the sum of 226,000,000,000 gold marks is not a capital sum, but includes payment of both principal and interest, spread over a forty-two year period, with payments arranged on such an annuity basis as to give Germany a chance to draw breath during the earlier years of payment. The total of $56,000,000,000 is estimated by experts here as representing the equivalent of about $20,000,000,000, or possibly as much as $25,000,000,000 of principal, plus the interest to be paid during the forty-two year period.

Germany's Ability to Pay Doubted.

Exclusive of the proposed plan for a tax on German exports, it is seriously doubted by the best informed authorities in Washington that Germany will be able to pay such a sum. One expert asserted today that Germany might possibly have been able to pay that amount if certain things had been achieved a year or a year and a half ago. If this amount had been fixed at the time of the peace conference, and Germany had retained her merchant ships with which to trade with the rest of the world, and had also received several years' leeway before beginning to make real payments on the reparations account, she might have been able to pay, experts believe, an indemnity of $20,000,000,000, on which the rate of interest at 5 per cent. would have represented interest payments of a billion dollars a year, or $30,000,000,000 interest in thirty years, and $50,000,000,000 in payment of both interest and principal in that period.

American official expert opinion, however, has been that if this had been done, Germany would not have been able to pay more than a maximum of $15,000,000,000 principal plus interest. It is even doubted in quarters where the status of Germany's ability to pay has been carefully canvassed that Germany can be surely counted upon to pay more than a principal of $10,000,000,000 which, at 5 per cent. interest for thirty years, would represent payment of $25,000,000,000 principal and interest within thirty years.

The allied Premiers are not being criticised for the plan of settlement reached yesterday. The conviction in informed quarters here is that Premier Briand has gone as far as could possibly be expected in the present state of French popular opinion and obtained the best agreement possible at this time. It is realized here that he has made considerable concessions, as compared with the position of the French Government during the last year, and especially as compared with the attitude of the French delegates at the Paris Peace Conference.

From this standpoint of a striking recession from the original French position, the agreement is viewed in informed quarters here as an important step in the right direction. But Federal experts who have made a thorough study of the whole question of Germany's ability to pay insist that the settlement just reached cannot be accepted as final or fundamental. They believe that when French public opinion is ripe for it, there must be still further recession until the sum that Germany can be positively expected to pay has been definitely fixed.

Question of German Bonds.

It was pointed out by one Federal expert today that the greatest difficulty in the situation will be that of finding a market for Germany's bonds until the investors of the world are confident that the settlement has been made on a fair, lasting basis. Whatever the final sum agreed upon between Germany and the Allies, there must be a flotation of bonds based on the German reparations settlement, and effort, of course, will be made to dispose of them through the world, and especially among American investors.

It is felt in authoritative circles here that it will be exceedingly difficult to sell these bonds so long as the investors of the world feel that the reparations sum fixed is more than Germany can absolutely pay.

The American official view has been that the sum should be so fixed that, while meeting the just claims of the allied powers under the treaty, it would still leave Germany the incentive to go ahead with plans for rehabilitation and for meeting her obligations of the treaty.

The best opinion here is that if the sum were definitely fixed around $10,000,000,000 in principal, plus interest at five per cent. for a period of about 30 years, such a settlement would not only more correctly represent Germany's ability to meet the reparations terms of the treaty, but it would provide a sound basis for the issuance of bonds, based on the settlement, which the rest of the world would be willing to buy.

High authorities here emphasize the fact that the situation is greatly changed for Germany as a result of the war; that her mercantile marine had been taken away by the Allies; that her foreign investments, &c., have been cut out, and that Germany is also suffering the results of a disastrous war. These experts point out that stripping Germany of her mercantile marine and her foreign investments has cut out an income of from $500,000,000 to $800,000,000, and that the allied Premiers now seem to expect that Germany in this crippled situation, is able to pay more on account of reparations than she could have paid in her palmiest years before the war, when she had her fleet and her foreign investments.

Another point made here today is that seem to think that Germany is able to pay more than twice that sum, plus interest, on indemnity account. The question was asked in one informed quarter how the Allies expect Germany, a defeated nation, to pay $20,000,000,000, plus interest, when the three leading victorious nations, England, France and Italy, have found it difficult to pay $10,000,000,000 to the United States or even the interest.

Export Tax Condemned.

The second feature of the reparations settlement plan under which Germany would be asked to pay to the Allies for forty-two years an annual tax of 12 per cent. upon her total exports is regarded in very well informed quarters here as being perhaps the worst feature of the whole settlement. It is regarded as ridiculous because the plan of settlement after first demanding that Germany pay the equivalent of $56,000,000,000 in forty-two years, or what is here believed to be twice the sum Germany can reasonably be regarded as able to pay, the Premiers then call upon Germany to set up a tax of 12 per cent. upon German exports that certainly could not be paid if the $56,000,000,000 indemnity sum is beyond German ability to meet.

Such a tax, it was suggested by an expert, would not only make the cost of German exports more costly to the rest of the world and to that extent cripple Germany's ability to enter into wider national markets, but it would also render it incumbent upon the German Government to collect this tax from the exporters or manufacturers and make the necessary guarantees to the Allies for its collection.

Another condition proposed in the allied plan of settlement is that Germany shall revise her interior fiscal system and balance or "match" her budget. In an informed quarter tonight it was pointed out that France is not now matching her budget, that England was just about doing it and the United States was coming nearer doing it than any other power. It was suggested that the 12 per cent. export tax, if put into effect, must add to the cost of the operation o fthe German Government, which would probably have to issue notes in an effort to meet payments which experts here think impossible to pay.

The vital need of the situation, in the opinion of American Government officials, is that as soon as possible the Allies surely determine in exact figures the sum which Germany can reasonably be regarded as able to pay, as a maximum. It is felt that the sum so fixed should be one which the investors of the world can be convinced Germany is able to pay, because unless such investors, especially those in the United States, are so satisfied they will not buy bonds. The next consideration, it is insisted, involves the question as to how much the Allies can afford to require Germany to pay out of money that would be obtained through competition of German goods in world markets.

The German Government is confidently expected to make vigorous opposition to the plan of settlement. Whether this opposition will run to the point of absolute rejection will depend on the ability of the German Government, it is thought, to maintain itself in power. As Germany is unable to resist the allied powers, the Government, driven into a corner, may ultimately feel compelled to sign the agreement. But the confident expectation in authoritative circles here is that the events will demonstrate that the amount of reparations fixed is beyond Germany's real ability to pay, and will force another revision of the indemnity settlement, but that meanwhile as a result of the failure to make a permanent settlement, Germany may be placed in worse economic position by the time the next attempt to reach an agreement is undertaken by the Allies.

DENIES BRITISH RUMOR OF A GENERAL ELECTION

Chronicle's Political Writer Says Most Unionists Remain Faithful to Premier's Leadership.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The Daily Chronicle's political correspondent gives denial to the rumor published in anti-Lloyd George papers crediting the Premier with the intention of bringing in a budget of £950,000,000 and then having a general election with a view to solving the difficulties raised by the alleged secession of units from the Coalition.

The correspondent says that there may be a budget of £950,000,000, which, indeed, has been foreshadowed, notably by Andrew Bonar Law in a recent speech, but that the Government has no intention of going to the country immediately afterward and as the result of whatever favorable impression the budget makes.

He adds that minor differences in the Unionist wing of the Coalition have been exaggerated by the Government's political opponents. Mr. Bonar Law, he says, has no intention of retiring from the leadership of the Unionist Party; Sir George Younger has denied that there is any lack of confidence between himself and his leader; Lord Edward Talbot has denied that he is going to resign, and Lord Derby in a speech at Manchester on Friday denied that he was trying to form a new party or taking any action hostile to the Government.

If Lord Robert Cecil should carry out his implied intention of sitting in opposition to the Government, the correspondent says, probably not more than two or three would follow him across the floor of the House.

FITZSIMMONS HELD IN WIFE'S MURDER

Worker at Camp Raritan Denies All Knowledge of Her Brutal Killing.

WOODBRIDGE, N. J., Jan. 30.—William Fitzsimmons, 32 years old, an assembler at Camp Raritan, was arrested by the Middlesex County authorities today in connection with the murder of his 19-year-old wife, May, on Saturday. He will be given a hearing tomorrow morning.

Fitzsimmons's detention followed a long conference with Assistant Prosecutor J. E. Coolan and Chief of Police Patrick Murphy here, to whom he is said to have denied all knowledge of the crime.

Mrs. Fitzsimmons was found with her throat cut in a bedroom on the upper floor of their home, 2 Thompson Street, just before noon yesterday. She was fully dressed, and the police believe she was stunned by a blow on the head and then murdered. There was no evidence of a struggle and no razor or other weapon has been found. No motive for the murder has been learned.

Fitzsimmons told the authorities that his wife called him as usual yesterday morning and prepared his breakfast before he left for work. He insists that they had not quarreled. Chief Murphy learned that Fitzsimmons punched a time card at Camp Raritan at 7:58, and remained at work until noon, when he was informed of the murder. Fitzsimmons explained bloodstains on his shoes by saying he had killed two chickens on Friday night. Two dead chickens were found in the cellar, where Fitzsimmons said he had left them.

TO BURY MISS HENTON HERE

Permission Given to Take American Student's Body From Paris.

PARIS, Jan. 30.—Permission has been received to transport to the United States the body of Miss Barnaby Henton of Versailles, Ky., a post-graduate student at the Sorbonne, who dies as a result of a fall from the balcony on the fifth floor of her boarding house last Friday. No instructions, however, have yet been received from the girl's father.

Police Commissioner Aubrais, who investigated the circumstances connected with the death of the young woman, said the indications pointed to an accident.

SHIP AFIRE AT SEA

Crew of Helpless Italian Tanker Hopeless When Shock Snuffed Out the Flames.

ENGINEER SAVES FIREMEN

Probably Fatally Burned in Rescuing Two Trapped in Blazing Engine Room.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 30.—The Italian steamer Nettuno, bound from Port Arthur, Texas, to Brindisi, Italy, was towed into this port today by the Coast Guard cutter Yamacraw, after being afire at sea.

Captain Bersini attributed the saving of his ship to a miracle—the explosion of her fuel oil tanks, which literally snuffed out the fire after it had raged unchecked for twenty hours. The blaze was caused by the bursting of a feed pipe in the engine room when the Nettuno was four days out from Port Arthur, from which she cleared on Jan. 21 with a cargo of gasoline and fuel oil. At that time she was off the Florida coast, near Bermuda.

In a few moments the Nettuno was a mass of flames amidships and it did not seem possible for her to remain afloat long, Captain Bersini stated.

Seated in his badly damaged cabin while the Nettuno swung easily at anchor in the river, Captain Bersini described vividly the horror through which he and the ship's personnel lived during the twenty hours the fire raged unchecked while the ship wallowed helplessly in heavy seas. The crew fought with desperation to keep the fire from the gasoline stored in the hold. The fight, however, appeared hopeless, and momentarily they expected the flames to reach the gasoline and blow the ship to atoms.

Engineer Descends Into Flames.

Practically every lifeboat had either been carried away or smashed by the terrible buffeting the tanker sustained during the hours the fire twisted and wrecked her engine room and cracked her steel decks and sideplates.

The hero of the adventure was Vioganni, third engineer, who volunteered to go below at the time the feed pipe burst in order to shut off the flow of oil and rescue two firemen trapped in the fireroom. Fighting his way through the roaring flames, he reached the pipe and managed to stop the flow of oil, and then assisted the firemen to the upper deck. When he reached it his clothing had been burned almost entirely from his body and his flesh was cooked in places. Viogani and the two firemen, who were also badly burned, were transferred to the Belgian steamer Kremlin on Jan. 26, the day after the first aboard the Nettuno had been extinguished, and sent to Newport News.

The Yamacraw, which had been advised to look out for the Nettuno, picked up the ship on Jan. 28 and headed for Jacksonville. The Nettuno is owned by the Italian State Railways, her home port being Palermo, Italy. She is so badly damaged that it is estimated that it will be weeks before she is again ready for sea. The Nettuno is a 6,000-ton ship, 400 feet long with a beam of 60 feet.

Burned Seamen in Hospital.

NEWPORT NEWS, Jan. 30.—Three members of the crew of the Italian steamer Nettuno were landed at Newport News today by the Belgian steamship Kremlin and rushed to a hospital for treatment for severe burns sustained when fire broke out in the engine room of the Nettuno off the coast of Florida last Wednesday. One of the men, Landi Viogannl, third engineer, is not expected to live.

BEAUMONT, Texas, Jan. 30.—The Italian steamer Nettuno figured in the courts here about two weeks ago. It was alleged that a customs rule of a law enacted in 1799 had been violated and an attempt was made by Government agents to seize the vessel. When the matter was referred to the Department of Justice at Washington, however, the order came back to release the ship as its ownership was vested, apparently, in the Italian Government. The Nettuno cleared after paying approximately $4,100 customs penalties.

The threatened litigation was the result of the ship's bringing 149 cases of intoxicating liquors which did not show on the manifest.

KEEP HANDS ON GUNS SAYS ADMIRAL SIMS

Naval Officer Urges Need of Civilian Interest in Nation's Military Forces.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 30.—The importance of smaller naval craft as compared with capital ships was emphasized in an address by Admiral William S. Sims at a Y. M. C. A. meeting in the Auditorium here this afternoon.

Admiral Sims declared that if Germany had had as many submarines at the beginning of the war as she built during the war "we would now be speaking German in this country."

The Admiral urged the need for intelligent interest in the military forces by civilians, and closed his address with the statement:

"We have lived without the pressure of the probability of war. I do not know what is going to take place in the immediate future, but we might as well have our hands on our guns."

In a statement following his talk, Admiral Sims said that his recent remarks on the Irish question were based on historic facts and that he would repeat them when the occasion offered. Complaint was made to Secretary Daniels recently regarding an address made by the Admiral.

ORDER Ballantine's GOLDEN GLOW GINGER ALE

PARTY HEADS BACK MILLER PROGRAM

State Leaders Decide to Ignore Republican Legislators From City and Pass Bills.

VOTES HERE NOT NEEDED

Brooklyn Realty Board Endorses Governor's Transit Plan — Labor Federation Declares Opposition.

The leaders of the Republican State organization have decided to put bills through the Legislature to carry out Governor Nathan L. Miller's traction program, regardless of the wishes of the Republican members from New York City, it was learned authoritatively last night.

No pressure will be exerted, it was said, upon any Republican member of either the State Senate or the Assembly to vote for the bills, because these votes are not needed. Although it is not expected that every Republican legislator from New York City will vote against the bills, the Republican up-State leaders were said to be willing that this should happen if political exigencies should lead the New York City members to take this position.

There are only twenty-three city members of the Senate, twelve Republicans, ten Democrats and one Socialist, out of the total membership of fifty-one, and with twenty-eight up-State votes the Republican organization has a sufficient number to pass the bills.

In the Assembly there are sixty-two New York City members and only two Democratic members up-State, a total of sixty-four out of a total membership of 150. Here also the up-State Republicans have complete control.

In view of this situation, the Republican State organization leaders were said to be willing that in addition to voting against the bills, the New York City Senators and Assemblymen should do a certain amount of talking against them if that should seem desirable for home consumption and to make their re-election more certain, without any loss of party regularity. The opposition of most of the Brooklyn Republican Senators and Assemblymen was said to be causing no uneasiness to the organization for the reason stated.

Realty Board Backs Governor.

The public interest in Governor Miller's proposal to settle New York City's transit problem by giving a new State commission power to regulate rates and modify conditions of franchises of contracts was shown yesterday by the action taken by several organizations. The Brooklyn Real Estate Board adopted a resolution indorsing the Governors' traction message, and issued a statement to all taxpayers and civic organizations in the State giving the reasons for their action.

The New York State Federation of Labor announced through its executive council that it had sent a request to every union man and woman in the State to do their utmost to bring about the defeat of any legislation which sought to increase fares. It was said that organized labor considered Governor Miller's proposal to take from the Board of Estimate the partial power it now has over the transit situation a violation of "home rule."

William Raymond Burling, President of the Brooklyn Real Estate Board, in the statement to taxpayers and civic organizations, said:

"Inasmuch as the present transit conditions in this city, and, in fact, throughout the cities of the entire State, are in a most trying situation, as viewed from both the taxpayers' and citizens' standpoint, it is our opinion that the proposals of Governor Miller coming at this time with respect to transit matters, call for the most careful and deliberate consideration of all organizations having as their prime purpose the betterment of conditions in the various localities of the State.

Telegram Sent to Governor.

"The Brooklyn Real Estate Board, representative in its membership of all the various interests, both directly and indirectly associated with the ownership of real property, after having had their Transit Committee carefully study the proposal, and who unanimously recommend its endorsement, has taken as a board endorsed it as evidenced by the telegram sent Governor Miller yesterday —the phrasing of which follows:

The Brooklyn Real Estate Board, impressed with the fearlessness of the attitude with which you have approached the transit problem, in the City of New York, after most serious and careful consideration of your proposals, has and does unqualifiedly endorse your proposals, and assures you that you may call upon us for co-operation to the fullest possible extent.

"We feel it is but fitting that we call our action to your attention, realizing that in a united front there is the greatest strength. Therefore, we respectfully ask that you promptly take this matter up and upon reaching your conclusion advise us of the result. If any information relative to this subject which we have is desired by you, you have but to call upon us to obtain it."

The fact that the State Federation of Labor had decided to enter the traction conflict was made known by John Sullivan, Vice President, a member of the Executive Council and President of the Central Trades and Labor Assembly of New York City, after a meeting of the Brewery, Flour, Cereal and Soft Drink Workers' Union at its headquarters, 35 Third Avenue, where resolutions were passed "opposing any infringement upon the home rule prerogatives of New York City."

"Up-State members of the Senate and Assembly should be made to feel that to deprive New York City of its home rule rights would be an unforgivable imposition on Mr. Sullivan said.

"This would be especially true were any steps taken or any measures enacted into laws that would impose additional hardships on the people of this city. In fact, the city people alone should have full say in matters that immediately affect them."

Sustains Governor's View.

Governor Miller's view of the legal aspects of the situation was sustained in a statement issued by Leslie J. Tompkins, professor of law in New York University, former Assistant District Attorney and a leading member of Tammany. Mr. Tompkins said that the Public Service Commission as the delegate of the Legislature has all the power of the Legislature, that the city is the creation of the State and is without power to bind the State, unless such power is expressly conferred by its charter.

"A municipality, being but a creature of the State, can never set up as against the State the obligation of a contract. Constitutional limitations which prevent the Legislature from impairing the obligation of a contract do not debar it from annulling obligations due the public," he said.

Preaches Against "Home Rule."

Another advocate of Governor Miller's traction message appeared in the Rev. James H. Lockwood, pastor of the South Third Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn. In his sermon yesterday morning he said:

"The citizens of this city ought to be thankful that they have as Governor of the State a man of brains and courage, who is determined, in spite of all demagoguery and clamor, to remedy the intolerable transit chaos of this city.

"Beware of the dust-screen raised by certain politicians of both parties. They call it fondly 'home rule.' If what we have been suffering from here for the last three or four years in the way of transportation tortures is a sample of their 'home rule,' then let us fervently pray to be delivered from that kind of rule.

"The indecent crowding of our people as they go to and from their daily toil may not disturb the limousine-riding local politicians, but someone should raise his voice in sincere behalf of the people's health, comfort and decency. Governor Miller's plan cannot conceivably give us anything worse than the insufferable present conditions. In all probability, it will mean much relief and, possibly, a complete cure."

The City Club today will send to Senator John Knight, Chairman of the Public Service Committee of the State Senate, a request for a public hearing on the permissive municipal ownership bill presented last week by Senator James J. Walker. In the letter, Nelson S. Spencer, President of the club, states that its Committee on Public Service has endorsed the measure, subject to a few further improvements which will be suggested later.

The Democratic legislators from New York City will confer on the traction situation today at City Hall on the call of Senator Walker, minority leader of the Senate. Senator Walker said last night that the conference would discuss plans to defeat, if possible, the bills which will be introduced to carry out the suggestions of Governor Miller. He said the Democratic members of the Legislature would furnish a nucleus for the opposition and that he hoped to have the question discussed there regardless of politics and to obtain the support of many Republican members who do not favor the Governor's proposals.

The Taxpayers' Alliance of Staten Island will conduct a campaign against the Governor's plan. Meetings have already been arranged at New Brighton, West Brighton, Tomkinsville, Stapleton, Fort Richmond and other towns there.

SAYS "RUBES" WILL SAVE CITY

W. H. Anderson Predicts Benefits From Up-State Government.

ALBION, N. Y., Jan. 30.—The so-called "rube government" of up-State is going to save New York City from a degree of corruption that would otherwise make its destruction inevitable, William H. Anderson, State superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, declared at a union meeting at the Methodist Episcopal Church here tonight.

Mr. Anderson asserted that the most encouraging political event in years was the ability of the up-State section of New York to roll up a plurality of 400,000 for a law enforcement Governor and overcome the most that Tammany could do in New York City by "voting and stealing."

CRAIG SAYS FARE CANNOT BE RAISED

Declares There Is No Procedure by Which Governor Can Insure an Increase.

Controller Charles L. Craig at the forum conducted by the west side branch of the Free Synagogue, St. Nicholas Avenue and 103d Street, yesterday declared that this city would never submit to the Governor's proposal for an increased fare. He said there is no possible procedure that the Governor may devise that will insure the transit companies an increase because of the wording of the original contract, which specifies that the fare be 5 cents, and a provision in the State Constitution which prohibits any one increasing the compensation of a contractor. The Interborough, said the controller, is a contractor.

"Governor Miller fell into a very serious error by making a statement the other day that the water was taken out of the traction securities," said Mr. Craig. He traced the history of the subway system since the Interborough expended about $10,000,000 for fitting up the original subway, and told of the subsequent stock and bond issues amounting to $141,000,000.

"I want you to understand," said the Controller, "that there is absolutely no foundation in the statement that you will get better service with an increase in fare."

Mr. Craig said that the Interborough was "very astute in putting things in tight" and in its original contract with the city specified that no person or body should have the right to change the fare from five cents.

"I know Judge Miller is a good lawyer and I know a good lawyer makes mistakes. He ought to know that there is no Legislaure that could put over an increased fare without the consent of the City of New York and I think the Constitution of the State prohibits it giving its consent. So you see we have him both ways. And then there is a provision in the State Constitution which prohibits increasing the compensation of any contractor. Since the Interborough holds contract No. 3, I believe it comes under this article. So you need have no apprehension that the fare in this city will ever be increased."

ALBANY TIE-UP CONTINUES.

Conference of Trolley Strikers, Employers and Civic Bodies Futile.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—After a session of less than one hour today the conference of representatives of the United Traction Company, striking employes and of various municipal bodies, called by the Chamber of Commerce, adjourned.

The only announcement made was that the Board of Mediation of the State Industrial Commission would continue to attempt to effect a settlement of the trouble which has tied up street car service in Albany, Troy, Watervliet, Cohoes, Rensselaer, Green Island and Waterford since early Saturday morning.

UP-STATE LEADERS HEDGE ON TRANSIT

Like New York City Republicans, Legislators Delay Coming to a Decision.

FEAR MAYORS' CONFERENCE

Foes of Miller Plan Claim 69 Down-State Votes—"Dry" Hearing Wednesday.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Up-State Republican legislators who are beginning to evince slight uneasiness at the possibility that Governor Miller's transit program may be made a party measure took courage tonight over the refusal of New York City Republicans to take a definite stand either for or against his proposals this early. The up-State men also are not ready at this time to announce a decision. A few admit there will be some negative votes.

There are those above Westchester who view with increasing alarm opposition to the Governor's recommendations forcasted to be shown at the State conference of Mayors this week, representing thirty-three cities. They are wondering whether approval or disapproval of the transit suggestions, yet to be incorporated into bills, will continue or end individual political preferment. The possible effects of support of or opposition to the transit plan in coming municipal elections will likewise be a guiding factor, to some extent, in the casting of up-State Republican votes.

The opponents claim that at least 69 votes will come from down State to defeat the Governor's proposals. These figures include an analysis of the vote of the Brooklyn contingent, a majority of which, it is declared, will vote with the opposition, despite the approval given Mr. Miller's program by Jacob Livingston, Kings County Republican leader. If this compilation is based on anything like the accuracy claimed for it, only seven votes would be needed from up State to give victory to the opposition.

Lawmakers from up State will also watch with more than passing interest the "protest" meeting against the transit recommendations called by the Democratic minority leaders, Senator James J. Walker and Assemblyman Charles D. Donohue, in New York City tomorrow.

Hearings on the prohibition enforcement measure and the bills calling for the repeal or modification of the daylight saving law will be held Wednesday afternoon. The prohibition hearing will be before the joint Taxation and Retrenchment Committee of the Senate and the Excise Committee of the Assembly. The daylight saving hearings will be held before the Assembly Agricultural Committee.

The State conference of Mayors will oppose all measures for the repeal of the daylight saving law and will favor the bill introduced by Assemblyman Hartwell W. Booth of Utica which would lessen by two months the period of daylight saving.

GOVERNOR STILL BETTER.

Hopes to Return to His Desk in Albany Early This Week.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—Governor Miller's condition was reported tonight as "greatly improved," and it was hoped by his physician that he would be able to resume his duties at the Capitol by Tuesday or Wednesday.

The Governor has been suffering from a bronchial cold and from overwork.

ZION DEACONESSES COMING.

Voliva Sends Apostles to Christianize "Wicked New York."

ZION, Ill., Jan. 30.—Overseer Glenn Voliva, who has barred smoking among the men and low neck waists and cosmetics among the women in this settlement of disciples of the Christian Catholic Apostolic Church of Zion, tonight announced that he had sent two emissaries to "Christianize the wicked city of New York."

The emissaries are Deaconesses Helen A. Buhman and Belle Schellhorn. Voliva declared they were his star literature women and that they would distribute pamphlets "from door to door and office to office, covering all of the business district, the shipping circles and all steamers bound for foreign ports."

"When they get through," he said, "New York will not be such a wicked city."

TO ACCEPT $5,000,000 FUND.

American Legion Memorial Committee Endorses K. of C. Gift.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 30.—Semmes Walmsley, Chairman of the National Memorial Committee of the American Legion, announced tonight that his committee has decided to recommend acceptance of the $5,000,000 offered the American Legion by the Knights of Columbus for use in the erection of a memorial to those who died in France.

The report will be presented to the National Executive Committee in Washington, Feb. 7.

ARREST TWO WOMEN IN DRUGGIST'S MURDER

One May Be Charged as Accessory—Hold Two Who Saw Grave Digger Slain.

Detectives under Captain George Busby of the First Inspection District arrested two woman in Hoboken early yesterday morning as material witnesses in connection with the murder of Israel Turk, 32 years old, a prosperous druggist at 209 East Broadway, who was mortally wounded, supposedly by a robber, in his apartment at 271 East Broadway about 2 o'clock Saturday morning. Against one of these women a charge of accessory before the fact may be entered, it was learned.

The women were Mrs. Anna Brown, 22 years old, of 358 Newark Street, Hoboken, and Mrs. Rosa Schmertz, 28, of 70 Adams Street, also of Hoboken. Both will be taken today before the District Attorney.

The police are understood to be searching for an ex-convict who, it is thought, will be able to throw light on the murder. They are working on the theory that Turk was the victim of a plot, evolved by a woman and directed against Mrs. Turk.

Two men who witnessed the killing of Jacob Masura, a gravedigger, in the flat of Julius Rotbman, alias Yiddle Rosenwasser, 123 Stanton Street, near Essex Street, Saturday afternoon, have been arrested by the police of the Fifth Street Station. They are held as material witnesses at the instance of Assistant District Attorney Dineen. Detective Sergeant Otto Ransberry and Detectives Stetter, Kee and Quinn, who are at work on the case, believe that they will soon have the man who did the shooting.

Ignatz Zierer of 213 Second Street was held up by two men and robbed of $625 late Saturday night as he entered the hallway of the building where he lives, it became known yesterday. The men followed him from a Houston Street restaurant. Zierer's cries for help brought Patrolman Murray of the Fifth Street Station. A man who said he was Jacob Fisher, 33 years old, of 33 Rutgers Street, was arrested. He was arraigned in the Essex Market Police Court yesterday on a charge of robbery and held in $15,000 bail by Magistrate Raphael Tobias for examination today.

Reginald Perkins, 28 years old, of 510 Ninth Avenue, who said he was a member of the Police Reserves of the Twenty-third Precinct, was arraigned before Magistrate Charles N. Harris in Jefferson Market Court yesterday, charged with burglary and violation of the Sullivn law. He was held in $2,000 bail for the action of the Grand Jury.

He was arrested in the office of the New York Butchers' Dressed Beef Company, 495 Eleventh Avenue, on complaint of Joseph Meyerowitz, the manager, who declared that Perkins had broken into the cashier's cage and that keys found in his possession had been stolen several weeks ago.

Perkins said he had a right to carry a revolver as a police reserve, and explained his presence in the office by saying that he was employed by a fire patrol company and entered in performance of his duty.

QUITS BUYING PETROLEUM.

Germany Now Permits Oil Firms to Import Directly.

BERLIN, Jan. 29.—The German Government has discontinued its purchases of petroleum and benzine, after having bought about 75,000 tons of both from the Standard Oil Company, payment for which was made in dollars.

The German-American Petroleum Company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company, and other German petroleum firms now are permitted to negotiate for importations directly, although the Government still controls the marketing of petroleum and benzine.

FIRE EXCITES 50 IN BATHS.

Kerosene on Roof Starts Investigation of Third Blaze in Year.

Fifty men, wearing whatever came handiest, prepared to rush from Benjamin Schmall's Russian Baths at 302 Wyona Avenue, Brooklyn, early yesterday morning, when policemen discovered that the roof was ablaze. The officers managed to extinguish the fire before the firemen came and in time to prevent a half-clad exodus.

Part of the roof was saturated with kerosene, and an investigation was started after Schmall had told the authorities this was the third fire in a year. He believed rivals were trying to burn him out of business.

TO TRY PATACCIO IN MARCH.

Italian Court to Act on Charge of Murder Here.

NAPLES, Jan. 29.—The case of Vincenzo Pataccio, who is being held here on the charge of having shot and killed Josephine Gentile and Lena Spenelli in New York City in 1910, will be tried during the first fortnight of March, it was announced today.

Detective Fiaschetti, Chief of the Italian section of the New York Police Department, who came here in connection with the case, has decided to return to the United States without waiting for the trial to open.

Hangs Himself in Cellar.

RUTHERFORD, N. J., Jan. 30.—Rudolph F. Deplanta, an expert in forestry, 56 years old, committed suicide by hanging himself in the cellar of his home, 452 Stuyvesant Avenue, today. He told his wife and daughter he was going to fix the furnace. When he failed to return the daughter went to the cellar and found her father's body hanging from a joist. He had suffered a nervous breakdown recently.

NOW INCLINE TO INQUIRY ON HYLAN

Lusk and Machold Influenced by Documents Submitted by Wallstein.

RESOLUTION TO BE AMENDED

Elon R. Brown Likely to Be Counsel if Legislature Appoints Investigating Committee.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—The President pro tem of the Senate, Clayton R. Lusk, and H. Edmund Machold, Speaker of the Assembly, who, to use a colloquial term, have been "from Missouri" with advocates for a legislative investigation of the Hylan administration, are being "shown." There are indications also that they are beginning to see the light.

Leonard M. Wallstein, ex-Commissioner of Accounts, this week had a long conference with the leader of the Senate and with Speaker Machold, in the course of which he urged on them the necessity of a city investigation by a legislative committee. Mr. Wallstein brought to the Capitol documentary evidence indicating corruption in more than one of the city departments. The legislative leaders have called for additional data, which probably will be submitted during the coming week. Already, however, they are beginning to agree with those who have maintained that political considerations should not be permitted to stand in the way of a searching inquiry into the conduct of the Hylan administration.

"The leaders are seriously considering the question of whether there should not be a legislative investigation of New York City affairs," said Senator Lusk in discussing the proposal. "No decision has been reached, however."

The most weighty objections to a legislative investigation felt at the Capitol have come from Republican leaders in New York City. They have felt that the Hylan administration already stands convicted in the public mind of incompetency and is under public supicion for even graver derelictions.

They feel that under the circumstances any ticket headed by Mayor Hylan as a candidate for re-election would start with a handicap. They fear that a legislative investigation might result in disclosures that would render the renomination of Mayor Hylan impossible and bring some stronger Democratic candidate for Mayor into the race. They are anxious to avoid that.

"It is true," said one of the legislative leaders, "that an inquiry from the point of view of the Republican leaders in New York City might be politically inexpedient, but, of course, we cannot permit any such objection to stand in the way of a legislative investigation in the event that the facts should justify one. The duty of the Legislature under the circumstances would be plain and we are not going to shirk it."

It was said here today that in all probability Elon R. Brown, former Senate leader, would become counsel for any legislative committee created to investigate New York City. While President pro tem of the Senate, he conducted an investigation into the financial affairs of New York City and framed remedial legislation that won the approval of Mayor Mitchel.

Ex-Senator Brown has been doing work recently in relation to the redrafting of the Robinson-Steinberg resolution providing for a legislative city inquiry. It is likely that the amended resolution will be ready for introduction next week. It will, in all likelihood, be held in committee until the legislative leaders shall have fully determined their course.

SAYS GARDEN OF EDEN WAS LOCATED IN OHIO

Dr. George C. Allen Insists Adam and Eve Dwelt on Banks of Ohio River.

BOSTON, Jan. 30.—Dr. George C. Allen of Brookline, philologist and geologist, is convinced that the Garden of Eden was located in the area now occupied by the State of Ohio. Scientific research convinces him, he declares, that Adam and Eve dwelt on the banks of what is now the Ohio River.

"Authorities have told us that at the time of Adam and Eve the Garden of Eden was located where the north pole is now," says Dr. Allen. "That was 6,000 years ago. In the huge ice floes growths that come from tropical climes have been found.

"It has been proved that the point called the north pole moves entirely around the world every 25,000 years.

"Careful mathematical computations bring the original paradise where Ohio now is."

Dr. Allen says the red tribes of the earth add further evidence. These red tribes, which sprang from Adam and Eve, together with Orientals and whites have been "pushed" around the world by the changing climes, he declares, and he adds that the Redskins of North America now are dying out. Indian tribes all over the world, he says, have words that mean "Adam," "Ohio" and "Paradise."

In 19,000 years America probably will be inhabited by red people again, Dr. Allen predicts.

tors of the company with other counsel, and advice with respect to the hearings before the committee."

Strike Resume Quoted.

Under the caption "Strike" is this résumé of the services for which payment was made to the firm:

"Through consideration of the Brooklyn strike and of the successful unionizing of the Brooklyn roads by the Amalgamated, with the assistance of Hearst and Hylan. Conferences with officers and directors of the company as to the possibility of a strike in New York and methods of preventing same. Attendance before the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and other city officers, including the District Attorney, Public Service Commissioner; also other attendance at its office of the Public Service Commission with respect to settling of the strike in company with Mr. Hedley, Mr. Quackenbush and Public Service Commissioner Nixon."

Concerning work in relation to "Grand Jury Investigations," the claim for payment is based on the examination of the charge made by Mayor Hylan that the Interborough Company had conspired with its employes to bring about a strike as an aid to obtaining a higher fare, and advising President Frank Hedley of the company and other company officials concerning their rights and duties as witnesses before the Grand Jury, and personal attendance upon those officials who were summoned in the inquiry. This particular bill was rendered Dec. 16, 1919, and payment was made thirteen days later.

Concerning a payment of $15,259.83 made to the firm of Hiscock, Dohany, Williams & Cowie, Mr. Delaney says:

"This service was rendered for the purpose of procuring an amendment to the Public Service Commission law by extending the jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission over rates, fares and charges fixed by agreement with local authorities.' Disbursements in connection with the services of the firm included expenditures at the Fort Orange Club, Albany, and trips to Watertown, Rochester, Buffalo and other cities throughout the State."

In reference to the payment of $50,000 to Stone & Webster, it was discovered that this was only a payment on account of a charge by this firm of $80,000. Some of the work for which the chage was made was not in connection with rapid transit matters, says Mr. Delaney. Included in Mr. Delaney's statement is a letter from Stone & Webster to the late Theodore P. Shonts, as President of the Interborough Company, dated June 11, 1919. It referred to a conference which the firm had with Colonel Murphy, Chairman of the Inter-Met. Four and a Half Per Cent. Collateral Trust Bondholders' Protective Committee, in which the firm expressed a desire to obtain payment on account for examining the company for the information of the committee. Colonel Murphy, according to the letter, advised the firm that an arrangement had been made under which "bills for services in connection with our examination of the subway and elevated lines would be paid by your (the Interborough) company.

Attacks Webster Account.

The letter stated that charges for services up to June 1, 1919, amounted approximately to $82,526.14. A payment of $75,000 on account was requested. Then Mr. Delaney's statement reads:

"A voucher for $50,000, $30,000 of which was charged to the subway division and $20,000 to the Manhattan division, against the account 'general expenses' was made out on July 9, 1919, to Stone & Webster. This was a payment on account according to the receipt given.

"Under date of Dec. 4, 1919, a similar voucher for a similar amount in the same proportions was made to Stone & Webster on account of 'general expenses' in accordance with resolution of the Board of Directors, Dec. 3, 1919.

"Another payment, this time of $30,000, was made to Stone & Webster, in connection with the same work, on May 3, 1920. This followed a communication from Stone & Webster's Boston office to the Interborough Rapid Transit Company in which the investigator stated:

"'For your information, we beg to state that the amount of our services and expenses during the month of March, 1920, was $713.38, making a total amount up to April 1, 1920, $189,401.43, of which $100,000 has been paid, leaving an unpaid balance of $39,401.43.'

"A summary of the report of the Interborough Consolidated Corporation of the report made by Stone & Webster on the Interborough Consolidated Corporation was published and distributed at a cost of $4,575, of which the Interborough Company paid one-half, the Receiver of the New York Railways Company one-quarter and the trustee in bankruptcy of the Interborough Consolidated one-quarter. Payment of this bill was made in January, 1920, after conference with Judge Julius M. Mayer of the United States District Court. The Interborough officials were guided by a letter to Job E. Hedges, Receiver of the New York Railways Company from Judge Mayer, which is as follows:

"'My dear Mr. Receiver:

"'I have the letter of your Secretary of Jan. 7th in regard to the division of the charge relating to the distribution of the Stone & Webster summary report of the Interborough Consolidated Corporation.

"'I fully agree with your suggestion as to the distribution of this expense. While the report was made to the court, the distribution was made in the interest of the preservation of the various properties referred to and, for that reason, I deem it entirely proper to request the Interborough Rapid Transit to pay two-fourths of the expense and to divide the remainder of the expense between the estates in charge of Mr. Sheffield and yourself.

"'Appreciating the effect and manner in which these reports were distributed, I am,

"'Sincerely yours,

"'JULIUS M. MAYER.'"

Mr. Delaney explains that the examination of the accounts of the Interborough company was made by the employes of the Bureau of Finance and Accounts which he created in co-operation with the Board of Estimate, and was for the purpose of keeping track of the city's financial interests in the dual contracts. The examination goes back only to Jan. 1, 1919, the date of what is known as "initial" operation under the Interborough contract.

The results here displayed, Mr. Delaney states, "cover a considerable portion of the period." Part of the statement is to the effect that there are many other items of expenditures which will be objected to among the items involving the extension and third-tracking certificates of the Interborough Company, and the operating contract and extension certificates of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. Among other items which are to be inquired into are payments aggregating $242,000 to the "interest account for deficits." Mr. Delaney states that such a charge against operating costs is improper. The right of the city to object to certain payments as operating costs is conferred by the contract between the Interborough Company and the city.

SIR PHILIP GIBBS HERE

Doubts Ability of Germany to Pay Indemnity Demanded—Shackleton on Way to Canada.

'After nearly two hours' delay caused by ice packed in her slip at Pier 54, North River, the Cunarder Aquitania, from Southampton and Cherbourg, docked yesterday at noon. On board were 565 first cabin passengers, including notables of many nationalities; 780 second class, mostly Italians who embarked at Cherbourg, and 1,675 in the steerage.

Two of the first cabin passengers were the Prince and Princess Antoine Bibesco, the son-in-law and daughter of Herbert Asquith, former Premier of Great Britain. They were met at the pier by officials from the Rumanian Legation in Washington, and T. Tileston Wells, Consul General in New York.

Prince Bibesco said that he had been sixteen years with the Legation in London and had come here to be the Rumanian Minister at Washington, to which post he had been appointed because of his knowledge of the English-speaking people.

The transportation problem in Rumania is one of the most important the Government has to deal with at the present time, he said. Much of the railroad system torn up by the Germans has not yet been put into working shape.

Sir Philip Gibbs, English war correspondent, who was knighted by King George since his last visit to America, arrived to lecture on "Conditions in Europe After the War."

Sir Philip said that labor troubles in England had subsided and there was no danger of the Soviets putting over their propaganda on the British workmen.

"What do you think about the German indemnity?" he was asked.

"I do not think that the Germans will pay it," he said, "because they have not got the money. The Allies will have to make the conditions for payment much easier and extend the time. Make it a century instead of forty-two years as proposed in Paris and give the people a chance to go to work."

Sir Philip said he did not believe there was anything serious in the Japanese question, and that it was realized in Europe that if the people of the United States desired to have the biggest navy in the world they could have it because no nation could compete with them.

Sir Ernest Shackleton, the Antarctic explorer, arrived on the Aquitania on his way to Canada on private business.

Vice Admiral H. M. P. Huse, who was in command of the United States Naval forces in European waters, returned to take command of the Third Naval District, which includes New York Navy Yard.

HARDING MUST APPOINT NEW SHIPPING BOARD

Present Body, Unconfirmed by Republicans, Ceases Functioning After March 4.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Among the first appointments President Harding will have to make, after naming his Cabinet, will be those of members of the Shipping Board. Because of the failure of the Senate to confirm the present members, appointed by President Wilson, the body will cease to function after March 4. All of the present members were either appointed during the recess of this Congress or within recent months, and may not serve after the expiration of the Congress in which they failed of confirmation.

Admiral W. S. Benson, Chairman of the board, will go out with the others unless he is confirmed in the meantime, which is not likely because of the evident determination of the Republicans to hold up all pending Wilson nominations requiring Senate confirmation. While President Harding might reappoint some members of the present board, which is bi-partisan, he is under no obligation to do so.

It has been reported that John H. Rosseter of San Francisco is slated to become Chairman with the advent of the Harding Administration. Mr. Rosseter would be no stranger to the duties of the office, having been Director of the Division of Operations of the board and a trustee of the Emergency Fleet Corporation during the war. He is one of the leading shipping men of the country, being Vice President and General Manager of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and Vice President of W. R. Grace & Co. of New York.

Mr. Rosseter is a leading Republican of the Pacific Coast, and while he was an ardent supporter of Senator Hiram Johnson for the Presidential nomination—in fact, Chairman of the Johnson Campaign Finance Committee—his friends give him credit for having been the first man at the Chicago Convention to apprise Senator Harding of the fact that he had been agreed on as the party's nominee.

CRAVATH UNDERGOES SUCCESSFUL OPERATION

Lawyer Is Reported as Resting Easily After Having Stones Removed From Bladder.

Paul D. Cravath, the lawyer, was operated on for stones in the bladder yesterday morning, in Roosevelt Hospital. The operation was performed by Drs. Squires and Brewer of the hospital staff and was pronounced entirely successful, although Mr. Cravath will not be at his offices for several weeks.

At his home it was said that Mr. Cravath, who is 58 years old, felt ill several days ago and, after consulting his physician, decided to undergo the operation. He was described as out of all danger and resting easy last night.

Mr. Cravath, as the representative of the Treasury Department, was a member of the "House Mission" to the Inter-Allied War Conference in Paris in 1917 and served as adviser to the Inter-Allied Council on War Purchases and Finance in Paris and London during 1918. He was awarded the D. S. M. by General Pershing for "exceptionally meritorious conduct and services during the war."

HAYS AND HERT RIVALS.

Chairman Said to Want Commerce Post, Which Hert Also Seeks.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—War has broken out within the ranks of the Republican National Committee between the friends of National Chairman Will H. Hays and A. T. Hert of Kentucky. This information has come to Chicago from sources that lead directly to the incoming President.

The friction is said to have started when the National Chairman let it be known that he did not care to become Postmaster General and take on the active political generalship of the new Administration. The report is that Mr. Hays indicated that he preferred to be Secretary of Commerce, a post to which Mr. Hert actively aspired.

A situation has arisen, it is said in some quarters, that now prevents the nomination of both Chairman Hays and Mr. Hert to the Cabinet.

Children, Grandchildren, Great-Grandchildren and Hundreds of Friends Honor Jacob Dick.

Seventy years ago in Galicia, Jacob Dick, a Jew of humble origin, married a woman of his own station. Last night the Dicks, each of them now eighty-eight years old, celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in keeping with an orthodox custom which makes that gem appropriate to the commemoration of threescore years and ten of wedded life.

Had the event been designed as a pageant to depict the evolution of the immigrant it could not have been more expressive. When the police closed the doors of Volk's Lyceum because relatives and friends had overtaxed the capacity of the hall, there were all sorts of automobiles outside from the costliest imported car to the least pretentious American make. Inside were not only those that had come in the cars, but hundreds who had walked. They represented all stages of progress from the raw, poverty-stricken peddler speaking only a foreign tongue to the thoroughly Americanized, polished, prosperous retired business man and his wife.

Dick himself, having emigrated after his seven children were born, long since retired from the clothing business, which he entered here twenty-five years ago, after living for a time in Springfield, Mass. He had clung to the dress and the ways of his earlier days and looked the patriarch of the picture book. His eldest son, Abraham, now 66 and some time retired from the clothing business in Montreal, likewise was the picturesque type of the east side synagogue.

But the other six children were there, besides most of the forty-eight grandchildren, many of the twenty-six great-grandchildren and a host of more distant relatives, and many of them long had lost the faintest touch of foreign aspect.

Mrs. Dick seldom leaves the home at 129 Pitt Street, where the couple have remained even in their days of prosperity, but last night she was ensconced in state on a dais where all the abundant life that had grown up about her might do her honor. A shriveled, sweet-faced little old woman, she smiled and smiled, seeming now and then a bit dazed, though manifestly proud beyond words of the sparkling diadem in her silvered hair and the bouquet in her withered hands.

There was a big delegation from the synagogue at which the Dicks worship, and there were many gifts as well as messages from various parts of the world. Relatives came from two provinces in Canada and many States.

All seven of the Dick children survive and all were there last night. Here they are, with their ages and the numbers of their own progeny: Abraham, 66, 8; Solomon, 64, 7; Louis, 62, 9; Joshua, 58, 6; Israel, 48, 4; Mrs. Kate Goldblum, 44, 7; Rachel Munte, 42, 7.

MRS. HARDING ARRIVES TO REST AND TO SHOP

Wife of President-Elect Accompanied By Mrs. Harry New and Mrs. Edward B. McLean.

Mrs. Warren G. Harding, wife of the President-elect, arrived here yesterday afternoon from Washington to rest and do some shopping for her White House wardrobe. She was accompanied by Mrs. Harry New, wife of the United States Senator from Indiana, and Mrs. Edward Beale McLean, whose husband is owner of The Washington Post and Chairman of the Inaugural Committee on Arrangements. A secret service agent was with the party.

Mrs. Harding and her party reached the Pennsylvania station at 4:30, where Stationmaster William Egan met her and escorted her baggage to a waiting automobile. Only newspaper men were permitted on the lower platform when the train arrived, photographers and motion picture men being barred as, it was said, that Mrs. Harding had expressed a desire not to be photographed.

Mrs. Harding appeared fatigued as she faced the reporters, and upon alighting from the train she said she was too tired to talk, and did not expect to give any interviews while here.

Mrs. Harding wore a black hat, somewhat military in effect, with a robin's egg blue ostrich feather. Her full length coat, which was trimmed with black seal, was of a deep brown material. She wore gloves to match and black shoes.

Very few people in the station recognized Mrs. Harding as she walked to the automobile entrance. Her party motored to the Ritz-Carlton Hotel where they will stay while in the city.

CAMORRA FOE TRIES TO DIE.

Relatives of Convicted Men Rush to Get Abbatemaggio to Retract.

NAPLES, Jan. 30.—Signor Abbatemaggio, who in 1911 achieved prominence by denouncing the Camorra for the murder of Gennaro Cuocolo and his wife in 1906, attempted suicide by shooting here yesterday as the police were about to take him into custody on a charge of alleged fraud. The bullet perforated a lung but the physicians hope to extract the bullet and save his life. During the war Abbatemaggio was awarded four medals and later served in Fiume under d'Annunzio.

Interrogated by the police, the wounded man said: "I am dying. Believe the word of a dying man; I am innocent. It would be a long story to explain. I am the victim of circumstances."

All the relations of those condemned to prison in the Cuocolo trial, especially the sister of the notorious Enrico Alfano, known as "Erricone," immediately rushed to the hospital on learning of the attempted suicide, hoping to induce Abbatemaggio to declare his revelations during the trial to be false. They were prevented from seeing Abbatemaggio. The latter said to the police: "Abbatemaggio never lied. I have nothing to retract—nothing to add or take away from what I declared on that sad and notorious occasion."

Alfano and seven other members of the Camorra were found guilty in July, 1912, of having played the chief part in the murder of the Cuocolos, largely as a result of the testimony given by Abbatemaggio, who had belonged to the Camorra but turned State's evidence. The eight Camorrists were sentenced to thirty years' imprisonment and to ten years' of police surveillance, while the others convicted of having taken part in the crime were sentenced to shorter terms in jail.

SAN JOSE MEETING ENDS.

Delegates Depart After Creating Central American Federation.

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica, Jan. 30.—The delegates of Salvador, Honduras and Guatemala, who came here to take part in the conference of representatives of the five Central American Republics, for the purpose of creating a Central American Union, left here for home today, having successfully accomplished their mission. In bidding them farewell, Julio Acosta, President of Costa Rica, said:

"When you return home tell your people that the Government and people of Costa Rica recognize the importance of the work the conference accomplished in the interest of the prosperity of the four Central American States signing the convention. The Costa Rican Government intends to request all the American nations to lend their moral aid to the Central American Union."

16 SEVERELY BURNED IN TENEMENT FIRE

Thrilling Rescues by Firemen Mark Twenty-Minute Blaze in Rivington Street.

HUMAN BRIDGE SAVES MANY

Flames Start in Bakery and Cut Off Flight of Tenants on Upper Floors.

Sixteen persons were severely burned in a fire in a tenement at 7 Rivington Street that lasted only twenty minutes yesterday morning. Firemen made some rapid and thrilling rescues.

The fire started in the rear of a bakery on the ground floor, and by the time the firemen arrived flames were coming from the windows of the second and third floors, cutting off escape by the stairway. Those on the upper floors rushed to the roof.

When Deputy Chief Binns arrived a ladder was run up in front of the building and firemen helped those on the lower floors down that way. Other firemen went to the roof of 5 Rivington Street and climbed from the fire escape of that building to the fire escape of the burning building and formed a bridge over which other women were carried.

Dominick Scalia, 36, his wife Mary and their three children were struggling up the stairs toward the roof when firemen reached them. The children had been wrapped in blankets and escaped serious burns, but the parents were painfully injured. They were helped across the roof to the skylight of the next building, and sent to Volunteer Hospital.

Anthony Battinato, 31, and his wife Amelia escaped to the roof, but were burned about the hands and arms. Mrs. Battinato, dazed by smoke and pain, jumped to the roof of 3 Rivington Street, which is thirty feet lower than that of the burned building, and was injured internally. Both were taken to Volunteer Hospital.

Others who were burned were Richard Bechtel, 39, proprietor of the bakery, his wife Minnie and their daughter Bertha, 2 years old; Jasper and Antoinette Cermada and their son Joseph and daughter Mamie; John Bonacchio, 68, Filomena, his wife, and their niece Ida, 9; Joseph Lecari, 41, and Josephine and Mary Lecari.

Fireman Hopkins of Engine 55 was overcome by gas when helping tenants from the third floor. He was taken to Gouverneur Hospital.

HAD RECEPTION, ANYHOW.

Bridegroom-Elect Didn't Appear, but Philadelphia Girl Entertained.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 30.—Though the bridegroom-to-be failed to keep his engagement for the wedding and the ceremony had to be called off, the bride-to-be and thirty guests had the wedding reception just the same.

The "band of music" and the refreshments were all ready and the presents were all arranged nicely on exhibition, so what was the use of calling off the celebration just because there was nothing to celebrate?

That's what Camilla Lavender thought, anyway, when James Schimpp, her betrothed, left her waiting at the altar one day last week. It was too late when she received word of his change of mind, so Camilla went through with the affair as well as she could without him.

The Rev. Father Stewart was engaged to perform the ceremony in St. Stephen's Church and seventy invitations were sent to friends. The guests were all assembled, happy and expectant, but Schimpp didn't arrive.

Of course, Camilla was indignant, as was every one else. But the "band of music" hired for the reception had to be paid just the same, and the refreshments had to be eaten or they would go stale. So the bride-to-be gathered her bridal train in one hand and her courage in the other and went home to preside at the reception.

GIRL, 15, SLAYS MOTHER ON COLORADO RANCH

Confesses Shooting Parent and Burying Body—Kept Secret Three Weeks.

Special to The New York Times.

OAK CREEK, Col., Jan. 30.—Her mother's objection to her "keeping company" with Otto Hormanca, 14 years old, son of a neighboring rancher, is believed by the authorities to have led Annie Mudra, the fifteen-year-old daughter of Frank Mudra, a miner here, to shoot and kill her mother on their ranch in Twenty-Mile Park, sixteen miles northwest of Oak Creek, three weeks ago.

The Coroner's Jury last night returned a verdict against the child, who has made a full confession.

The confession was obtained while the girl was being brought here as a prisoner after several hours of examination. Annie told the story of the brutal crime in a matter-of-fact manner as she sat in the rear seat of a bobsleigh, within easy sight of another bobsleigh on which lay the body of her mother.

The confession was made to Deputy Coroner Giboney after she had previously told two conflicting stories, in which she allowed suspicion to rest upon her brother, William, and a smaller sister.

When chided by Giboney for not telling the truth, she recited the details of the murder, apparently without realizing the enormity of her crime. Her final confession, in substance, follows:

She and her mother had been quarreling because Mrs. Mudra objected to her receiving the attentions of the 14-year-old German-Slovak boy. Mrs. Mudra said Annie was too young to be going around with boys. Mother and daughter had many quarrels over Otto, the last taking place on the afternoon of Saturday, Jan. 8. Mrs. Mudra objected to him because he was a German-Slovak while her people were Czechoslovaks.

Mrs. Mudra was doing chores in the yard. Annie got a rifle and when her mother's back was turned fired one shot. The bullet struck Mrs. Mudra near the center of the back and she fell face downward. Then the girl went to her mother, who, suffering terrible agony, begged her daughter to put her out of her misery. Thereupon the girl fired the second shot into her mother's back, killing her instantly.

The girl allowed the body to lie where it fell until the following day. Then, after pledging her brother, William, to secrecy, they dragged the body to the barnyard and buried it.

Neither said anything about the murder for three weeks. Then Annie came here and told her father her mother wanted to see him. He had left the family on the ranch while working here in a mine. His daughter's answers to his questions aroused his suspicions and she admitted her mother was dead. When they reached the ranch she showed him where the body was buried and told conflicting stories of the tragedy.

SCOLDS WOMAN FIGHT FANS.

Dr. Straton Deems It Terrible That They Should Watch Ring Battle.

"To my mind, it is a terrible thing that our young women could find it in their hearts to attend a prize fight," said the Rev. Dr. John Roach Straton last evening in his sermon at Calvary Baptist Church, Fifty-seventh Street, west of Sixth Avenue.

"How could they sit at that ringside and look upon the spectacle of two practically naked men, battering and bruising each other and struggling in sweat and blood for mere animal mastery? And how could these young women come out in the public prints and glorify and exalt such disgraceful exhibitions by their praise?"

MISSING GIRL WEDS.

Miss Martha E. Crowell, Sought by Father, Found to Be a Wife.

Miss Martha E. Crowell of 16 Madison Avenue, Jersey City, is not missing but married.

After her father had asked the police to send out a general alarm for the 21-year-old girl, saying he had not heard from her since she returned from visiting a sister in Cuba, Jonathan Dixon telephoned to him that Miss Crowell now was Mrs. Jonathan Dixon of Strasburg, Pa. A reconciliation followed.

12 DEAD; 2 INQUIRIES INTO HOBOKEN FIRE

Headquarters and ordered the clerk to ring connections in every room. There is a main switch in the office which rings every connection. All the rooms were notified, and Ross and I went through the hotel shouting "fire." Ross was overcome on the top floor, but I got him down to the first floor where I, too, was overcome for a moment, but soon revived and brought Ross to safety."

Quin said he first saw smoke pouring from the linen room, a step or two away from his desk. He threw open the door and spent several minutes emptying the linen room of its contents. He found no fire there. He finally located the flames in Room 12, abutting an areaway, through which the fire quickly shot to the top floor, where it mushroomed.

All of the forty-six guest rooms and the six employes' rooms were occupied with the exception of Room 12. About ninety-five persons were in the hotel. Several families occupied rooms, it was learned, but the police were handicapped in their efforts to check up because the register was destroyed by the flames.

Firemen and other rescuers quickly reached the scene, but the fire had gained such headway through the air-shaft that those occupying the upper floors were trapped. A single fire escape at the rear of the building saved the lives of many. Several of those now believed to have been among the dead appeared at windows, but the firemen were powerless to rescue them.

Hoboken's two Fire Department chaplains, the Rev. Edward Kelly and the Rev. Charles MacDonald, entered the building with the rescue squad and administered the last rites of the Church to several and made a number of rescues.

The injured were removed to St. Mary's and to Christ Hospitals.

When the firemen were occupied in "washing down" the building, long after the flames had been checked, Richard Dierksen, employed in the Colonial as a dishwasher, was found in an employe's room on the top floor.

"I'm in hell, get away from me," the man shouted as he attempted to drive away his rescuers. He punched and kicked the firemen and police, who bore him to the street. He was removed to St. Mary's Hospital in an ambulance. There it was said Dierksen probably would recover from the severe burns he suffered, but doubts were expressed as to whether he would recover immediately from a mental derangement caused by his experience.

Salvaged Clothes Aid in Identification.

Many pairs of shoes and other articles of wearing apparel as well as bits of jewelry found in the fire-swept rooms were salvaged by the police and in several instances proved valuable in identifying the dead.

In the corridor leading to Room 29 was found the body of a man later identified as that of Frank Logan, 36, of Hoboken. Mrs. Mary Schumaker, who died in the hospital, was found in Room 29. She was identified by Mrs. Elisabeth Davis of 217 Second Street, Jersey City, with whom she had lived. Mrs. Davis also identified Logan's body. He was a chum of her son's, she said. Mrs. Schumaker had been living apart from her husband for eight years, according to Mrs. Davis. Four or five years ago, she told the police, Mrs. Schumaker received a letter from her husband in Akron, Ohio, and she thought they had met recently. As far as Mrs. Davis knew, Mrs. Shumaker had never been away fro mhome at night until Saturday.

The body of E. G. Snider was identified by his wife. Earlier in the day Snider's effects had been identified by George McDonough, "of Thirty-ninth Street," Brooklyn. Snider had occupied a room with a woman companion, the police said. The woman is among the dead.

When Jefferson Feeley, an attendant in Judge Blair's Court, Jersey City, called at Hoboken Police Headquarters to claim a set of false teeth recovered from the room he had occupied he identified a pair of woman's shoes.

Took Companion to Sanitarium.

He told the police the shoes belonged to a young woman with whom he had registered as "Mr. and Mrs. James J. Lyons, Tappan, N. Y." His companion was badly burned, and when they made their escape, Feeley said, he took her in a taxicab to the Ackerson Sanitarium, Jersey City, for treatment. The woman, whose real name Feeley said, was Margaret O'Hare, had registered at the sanitarium as "Mrs. Kelly."

The body of Miss Daisy Gray, 27, of 321 Pacific Avenue, Jersey City, was identified by Mrs. Mazie Lemarre of 1,207 Willow Avenue, Hoboken, a friend. That of Miss Hester Constance Peterson, 24, of 339 Fortieth Street, Brooklyn, was identified by her stepbrother, Oscar Hansen, and her uncle, Gustave Jurgensen, of the same address.

One of the seven bodies at the morgue was identified last night as that of Herman Linez, 42, of 619 Grove Street, Irvington, by Samuel Rice of 229 South Sixth Street, Newark. Rice would not discuss his friend's fate.

Miss Blanche Kaehler, 76 Maderson Street, Jersey City, who is unconscious in St. Mary's Hospital, was identified by means of a note the police found among her effects. In this note the man who later made the identification disclosed his address in Jersey City.

Questioned by detectives, he said he had an appointment with Miss Kaehler Saturday night, but had failed to keep it because he overslept. Little hope is held out for Miss Kaehler's recovery.

Recovers $450 From Shoe.

Robert Walter, who lived in the Colonial, was in New York during the fire. He returned to find his clothes in the hands of the police. He asked to examine the shoes. After a few minutes' examination of the collection Walter extracted his savings, $450, intact, from the toe of a shoe.

A man appeared at the Morgue in the morning and identified a body as that of his nephew, Thomas A. McGowan, 671 Leonard Street, Brooklyn. Not long after the identification had been made McGowan himself appeared with a young woman he described as his wife. Mrs. Mabel McGowan, of 409 Wythe Avenue, Brooklyn. The young man said he had been secretly married recently and spent his weeks-ends with his bride. They were at the Colonial and escaped with only their outer clothing. The young woman identified a pocketbook, a watch, diamond ring and several articles of apparel, which were turned over to her.

Late last night Edward Riker of 109 Oak Street, Jersey City, identified the body bearing two tags as that of his brother Joseph, a war veteran, who was wounded twice at Chateau Thierry. He is a member of a prominent Jersey City family. Saturday was the first night a man ever remained away from home. Joseph lived with his widowed mother. His body was thus mistakenly identified by Edward McGowan earlier in the day as that of his nephew.

ORIGIN OF PRUNES

In the early days of the Roman Empire plums were not grown in Europe.

Yet the Romans were so fond of them that they had them brought from Egypt—

A voyage so long as to necessitate drying the fruit to keep it from deteriorating.

Thus are we indebted to Egypt for prunes—one of the pleasures of the table at CHILDS.

'SPIRITS OF THE DEAD' ATTEND A LECTURE

Armstrong Chaloner's "Subconscious Mind" Gets Messages From Famous Persons.

"FUTURE LIFE IN FAIRYLAND"

Colonel Roosevelt, Lord Kitchener, W. T. Stead and Ella Wheeler Wilcox All "Respond."

John Armstrong Chaloner, propounder of the famous query to his brother Robert Chanler, "Who's looney now?" showed yesterday afternoon that he is on intimate terms with the spirit world. Leaning gracefully over a grand piano, in the yellow light of a lamp, on the otherwise dim stage of the Cort Theatre, Mr. Chaloner wrote messages from Lord Kitchener, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Theodore Roosevelt and any one the audience asked for without any hesitation at the dictation of his "subconscious mind."

Mr. Chaloner said he didn't have a thing to do with the messages, which flowed from him faster than he could write them down. He had a stenographer to record them.

For many years after his escape from Bloomingdale Asylum, Mr. Chaloner was legally insane in New York and legally sane in Virginia, where he lived. In 1919 he was declared sane in New York, and he is lecturing and writing to reform the lunacy laws.

A Fairyland in Every Head.

"This writing will be by my subconscious mind," said Mr. Chaloner. "I am a scientific medium. My subconscious mind got me into hell, but I don't regret it. This lecture was written by my subconscious mind. I didn't know what the next word would be. There is a fairyland in every one's head."

He turned to write, and the pencil, as Mr. Chaloner spoke, produced the following:

"I will not reply to any question touching the future. You know very well I will not lift the veil of the future. Now, I will answer questions about the great dead. I will ask my subconscious mind if it will answer.

He turned and wrote quickly and announced that the answer was yes. The first spirit asked for was Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

"I am the spirit of Ella Wheeler Wilcox," the answer came back. "Mr. Chaloner is a confirmed sceptic; he is not an absolute fool. He has set a test of supernatural control and when that test is fulfilled Mr. Chaloner is willing to let the world know that he is a believer in spiritualism."

William T. Stead was the next spirit summoned, and he came with the same vivid announcement: "I am the spirit of William T. Stead. I wish to say that the future life is inexpressibly superb. It is more like fairyland than anything else."

Colonel Roosevelt Is Called.

Theodore Roosevelt was next, and the subconscious mind announced that Colonel Roosevelt was glad his name had been mentioned, and that he was now on friendly terms with his old political enemy, Benjamin R. Tillman. Anything he could do to help in altering the human laws Colonel Roosevelt expressed himself as willing to do, and didn't mind being called by the audience if it helped.

Lord Kitchener said he regretted that the lunacy situation is as bad in Great Britain as it is in the United States. Jacob Schiff, Professor Metchnikoff, Bishop Burch and John Purroy Mitchel all contributed to Mr. Chaloner's seance.

Mr. Chaloner doesn't think pulling teeth is a good cure for insanity. It is nothing but a fad, and the "poor insane people go mumbling around without any teeth just as crazy as they were before."

Most of Mr. Chaloner's messages from beyond, he explained, come to him accompanied by raps. He doesn't hear them in New York, but gets a few raps on his door once in a while.

SUBMERGED AUTO SALVAGED

Machine in New York Bay Found to Be Empty.

The automobile discovered in New York Bay at the foot of Sixty-seventh Street, Brooklyn, was pulled up yesterday with grappling irons and taken aboard the police boat John F. Hylan. No bodies were in the car and none was found near it.

The car was found to belong to George Caplan, a dress manufacturer of 1,576 Union Street, Brooklyn, who reported it missing at the Atlantic Avenue Police Station on Friday night. It was stolen from Troy Avenue and Union Street.

No other clue to the person who might have driven it, other than the note found in an overcoat and signed by William Johnson of 1,614 Victoria Street, Philadelphia, has been found. A negro named Johnson, who was found yesterday at 1,624 Victoria Street, Philadelphia, said he had a brother, Ozine, but did not think his brother could drive a car.

The last letter from his brother said he intended to ship on a tramp steamer for Europe.

Three Children Die of Burns.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., Jan. 30.—Margaret Miller, 4 years old, and Joseph Miller, 2, died in the City Hospital late last night from burns received when their home was destroyed by fire yesterday. Their brother, Francis, 3, died earlier in the day. The parents of the children were out when the fire started.

NEIGHBORS JOIN HUNT FOR KIDNAPPED WOMAN

Los Angeles Police Say Mystery of Mrs. Witherell's Disappearance Is Near Solution.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 30.—The mystery surrounding the supposed kidnapping last Tuesday of Mrs. Gladys Witherell, wife of O. S. Witherell, President of an investment company, is near solution, detectives who have been investigating the case said tonight.

More than 100 neighbors of the Witherells, formed into squads led by city police officers, made a systematic search of the mountains back of Hollywood, the sector in which is the Witherell home. The district was divided into areas and a squad went through each area carefully, but without finding anything of value toward tracing the missing woman, so far as was given out.

Prayers were offered today in most of the Hollywood churches for the return of Mrs. Witherell to her family, and pastors asked their congregations to aid in the search.

A sheriff's posse spent the day searching the hills surrounding Los Angeles. Their leader said tonight that he expected the investigation to result in an arrest within a few hours.

MISS WILSON WILL SPEAK.

Will Discuss Community Centres at Woman's Party Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the President, has accepted the invitation of the National Woman's Party to address its convention in February on the work of the community centre organization, of the Board of Directors of which she is a member. The organization is a department of the Bureau of Education under the Department of Labor.

Miss Wilson will speak on Feb. 17 at the session at which Mrs. M. Toscan Bennett of Hartford, Conn., State Chairman of the Woman's Party, will preside. Other women who will discuss the legislative programs of Government bureaus and national women's organizations are:

Miss Julia Lathrop, Chief of the Children's Bureau; Miss Mary Anderson, Chief of the Woman's Bureau of the Department of Labor; Miss Ethel Smith, Legislative Secretary of the Women's Trade Union League; Dr. Lydia de Villbiss of the United States Public Health Service; Miss Lida Hafford, Washington Director of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Florence Kelly, General Secretary of the Consumers' League; Mrs. Philip Moore, President of the National Council of Women; Mrs. Henry Villard, President of the National Woman's Party; Miss Mabel Kittredge, President of the Woman's International League; Mrs. Ellis Yost, Legislative Chairman of the W. C. T. U.; Miss Mary Stewart, National Corresponding Secretary of the Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs; Mrs. Mina Van Winkle, head of the Police Bureau of the District of Columbia, and Miss Henrietta Additon, executive head of the United States Government Bureau of Social Hygiene.

Both the incoming and outgoing administrations are now represented on the program of the national memorial service and the convention of the Woman's Party. Mrs. Warren G. Harding has accepted the invitation of Mrs. Lawrence Lewis, Chairman, to serve on the committee which will present the sculptured group "The Suffrage Pioneers" to the nation at the Capitol on Feb. 15.

CHARGE CAPITALIST PLOT.

Machinists' Union Controls Crescent Iron Works, Called Bankrupt.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Bankruptcy proceedings begun yesterday at Norfolk against the Crescent Iron Works, selected by the International Association of Machinists as its model for the "Norfolk idea," of combating capital, were said tonight by officials of the union to be an attempt by th Iron Masters' Association of that city "to embarrass the workers' venture."

The Crescent Iron Works was said by E. C. Davison, Secretary-Treasurer of the union, to be entirely solvent and in process of re-organization under the name of the American Engineering Corporation. The supporters of the concern now consisted of machinists' officials, members of the association employed in the plant and Norfolk capital. W. J. Fielder, President of the Crescent Iron Works, he added, still maintains an interest in the plant, although control is invested in association officials and members.

A receiver was appointed, he asserted, without according a hearing to the legal owners. The "Norfolk idea," as outlined by officials of the union, contemplates the control of plants, where controversies of long standing exist, with the owners, through purchase of the controlling stock.

BOYS FIND HUMAN SKULL.

Lying Between Two Rocks—Believed to Be That of a Woman.

BUTLER, N. J., Jan. 30.—Mystery surrounds the finding late today, by two small boys, of a human skull, believed to be a woman's, between two rocks at Matthews Point, near Bloomingdale. So far as the police are aware, no woman had been reported missing in this vicinity.

How long the skull had lain where it was found will not be determined until experts have examined it. The lower part of the jaw is gone; there are two teeth, in good condition, in the upper jaw, and there is a hole in the left temple, just over the eye, which may have been made by a bullet.

A Domestic Dialogue
Of To-day

Scene: Anyone's home.
Time: Evening.

(Dinner is over. Mr. and Mrs. Anyone are reading the evening papers.)

Mr. A (chewing his cigar.) I see the Lone Star Steel Co., laid off a thousand men to-day.

Mrs. A (blandly.) Yes, I saw that.

Mr. A (rattling the paper.) Great guns! The B. B. & L. Railroad let twenty-five hundred men go last night!

Mrs. A (with apparent indifference.) Yeh, I saw that, too.

Mr. A (snorting.) It doesn't seem to bother you much!

Mrs. A (mildly.) I feel sorry for their families.

Mr. A (warming to the subject.) Sure! It's fine to feel sorry sitting in a warm room, chewing a caramel and looking at the advertisements to see how you can spend some more of my money tomorrow!

Mrs. A (solicitously.) Don't get so excited right after eating, Henry, it'll give you indigestion and maybe apoplexy.

Mr. A (hotly.) If this laying off and cutting down and cutting out continues, first thing you know I'll lose my business and then where do we get off?

Mrs. A (putting down her paper.) That's just what I've been waiting for you to ask me, Henry. And you're going to get a good, plain answer.

Mr. A (with scorn.) Is that so?

Mrs. A (firmly.) Yes, that's so. It's YOU and your partners and hundreds and thousands of other business men, in your position, who have brought about these doldrums. From 1914 to last year you had a red letter period. You made more money than you'd ever dreamed of. It fairly rolled in! And you felt fat and rich—and you were.

Mr. A (yawning.) Aw, forget it!

Mrs. A (bravely.) No, I won't forget it. Then, when the first let-up comes, you put a padlock on your bankbook, sew up your pockets, eat a big dinner, smoke a thirty cent cigar and read the death column! You listen to hard luck stories, you think of the poorhouse and you talk like a pallbearer! That's a fine way to make the world go 'round and prosper!

Mr. A (cuttingly.) And pray, what is your advice, O Wise One!

Mrs. A (steadily.) My advice is: Don't eat so much; don't smoke so much; don't listen so much; don't talk so much. Rip open your bankbook and your pocket—stop hoarding—spend wisely—discourage calamity mongers—encourage those about you—but, above all, WORK. Work like a demon, with your brains and hands. And smile! Smile like an angel, with your lips and your deeds. Then everything will come all right!

In a modest effort to dissipate the unnecessary business gloom and promote the activity and earnestness and enthusiasm requisite to the re-establishment of great prosperity, the Rotary Club of New York sponsors the advice printed above.

SUICIDES INCREASING ALL OVER THE WORLD

Save-a-Life League Reports 3,567 Men and 2,604 Women in United States in 1920.

MANY CHILDREN CASES

Rate Has Risen Abroad Since the War, Especially in Hungary, Germany and China.

Prohibition, politics, divorce and the extension of women's activities are some of the causes of a world-wide increase in suicide during 1920 by the Save-a-Life League, according to a report issued yesterday by its President, Dr. H. M. Warren. In the United States 6,171 were reported to the league, of which 3,567 were men and 2,604 women. In the report, Dr. F. L. Hoffman estimated that the suicides not reported would have raised the total to 12,000.

"Possibly the increase in women suicides may be due to the fact that so many have recently entered business and political life," says the report. "Unhappy marriage relations and present living conditions also contribute largely to the situation. The youngest suicide was 5, the oldest 103. Divorce figured prominently, more than 100 couples killing themselves for this reason. The great number of farmers who have given way to despair has been noticeable, also farmers' wives. Nothing is more to be regretted than the 400 soldiers who have destroyed their own lives since returning from the war. The drug addict has supplied a considerable number.

"Last year in the United States seventy-five Presidents and Managers of business concerns, thirty-six millionaires and twenty-three rich women became weary of life. A dozen writers, including two or three editors, help to make up the list. The lawyers number twenty-four, with eight judges. Fifty-one doctors were reported to us. Probably the unusual demands made upon them during the war and the influenza epidemic were the cause. Next to the physician was the actor and actress, forty reported. There were thirty-four teachers and college professors, twenty-four brokers and fifty-nine bankers, twelve clergymen, two evangelists and a Y. M. C. A. Secretary.

"Suicide among children has reached an alarming situation in this country. In 1919 there were 477 children who ended their lives in the United States. In 1920 the number increased to 707, 223 boys and 484 girls. The causes include fear of punishment, school troubles, unhappy home environment, cruelty, revenge and love affairs.

"All over the world reports show a marked increase in suicide since the war ended. During the war the rate fell the lowest in many years. From London, Paris and other European cities come distressing reports. To avoid starvation, it is said that entire families in China have poisoned themselves.

Auto Bandit Supplants Horse Thief.

Special to The New York Times.

CHESTER, Jan. 30.—An ancient Orange County organization known as the Chester Horse Thief Detective Association, which was formed many years ago to hunt down horse thieves, announced today that horse stealing having almost died out, it had just voted to "modernize and branch out," and will now pursue automobile thieves. The association elected J. S. Murray President; James Stedman, Vice President; George Tail, Secretary, and Wicks Board Treasurer.

ONE KILLED, 7 INJURED IN AUTO ACCIDENTS

Woman Succumbs After Collision Between Cars—Two More Will Probably Die.

One person was killed and seven others severely injured, two of them probably fatally, in automobile accidents yesterday. Herman Moses, 10 years old, and his brother, Phillip, 7, of 118 Saw Mill River Road, Yonkers, were probably fatally injured by an automobile which jumped onto the sidewalk and dragged the two boys under it.

John Simolesky, the driver, was arrested and charged with reckless driving. He said he believed something had gone wrong with the steering mechanism.

Katherine O'Donnell, 17, of Westchester, was pinned under an automobile which overturned near Woodcliff Lake, N. J., yesterday, after colliding with a heavier car. She died before an ambulance arrived. Hermina Hosman, 18, of Westwood, N. J., had her collar broken and several ribs broken. The other car did not stop.

An automobile skidded into a wagon at Park Avenue and Ninety-third Street last night and hurled Charles Wood of 236 East Thirty-fourth Street from the wagon to the pavement. He was taken to the Mount Sinai Hospital with a fractured skull.

An unidentified man, 60 years old, was struck and seriously injured by an automobile owned by Edward F. Sterns of 208 Eighth Street, Jersey City, last night. He was taken to the City Hospital with a fractured skull. His clothes bore the initials "R. G." and on a signet ring were the initials "A. L."

ATTEMPT TO BOYCOTT CONNAUGHT FAILS

Thousands Cheer Duke's Arrival in Calcutta, Despite Revolutionary Leader's Propaganda.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 29.—The boycott called for last week by the Bengal Provincial Congress against functions held in honor of the visit of the Duke of Connaught, who is in India to promote reform legislation, has been largely a failure, although a general strike became partially effective today at noon on the arrival of the Duke, who was received in state. Thousands of persons cheered the Duke along the route from the station to Government House, where he was received by the ruling Princes.

The attempt at boycotting the Duke was led personally by M. K. Gandhi, the revolutionary leader.

BRITISH STEAMER ASKS AID.

Loses Propeller Blades Off Scotland, Queenstown Hears by Wireless.

QUEENSTOWN, Jan. 30.—A wireless message asking assistance was received here today from the British steamer Sidlaw Range, which left Leith Jan. 22 for New York.

The steamer's propeller blades have been carried off, and she is drifting northwest of Scotland, off the Atlantic steamer route, the message says.

The Sidlaw Range is of 4,407 gross tons register. She is owned by Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd., of Liverpool, and was built in 1918.

ARCOLA makes Dave's house worth more money

[DIALOGUED FROM STORIES OF ARCOLA USERS]

"My husband built a bungalow for twenty-eight hundred, and we tried to keep it warm with stoves. But my land!

"'We'll sell and get out from under,' Dave said. 'I don't want to freeze to death.'

"But one day he saw an ARCOLA at the steamfitter's, and ordered one that very minute. It didn't need any cellar.

"So we put an ARCOLA in the kitchen, and hot-water radiators all through. The job was done in three days—those fellows knew their business!

"Then Dave got a better job in Pittsburg. 'We'll have to sell the bungalow quick,' he said.

"Half the houses in our town were for sale, but ours sold in one day.

"'I've looked at more'n twenty,' said Jimmy Hunt, who bought it, 'but this little heating system gets me.'

"We cleaned up twice the cost of the ARCOLA on the price we got, besides the coal we saved."

* * * *

The IDEAL-ARCOLA heats all rooms on less fuel than a stove requires for one room. The complete system, installed by your local dealer, costs but little more than a stove for each room; and far less than old expense for a hot-water heating system. Children cannot burn themselves; no fire risk.

Ideal-ARCOLA Heating Outfits

Low-cost, healthful warmth, through hot-water radiators, for the small home, store or school. The ARCOLA places the cottage, with or without cellar, on the heating plane of the First Mansion in the Land.

The water-jacketed ARCOLA is of itself a radiator. Replaces stoves, wastes no heat up chimneys, leaks no coal gas. Each tenant may have a separate ARCOLA. If used to heat part of building, extra sections and radiators may be added later.

Catalog has open views of houses, flats, stores, offices, with ARCOLA. Write Dept. 21.

GOVERNOR MILLER'S PLAN GAINING.

All the week-end reports, from Albany and elsewhere, indicate that Governor Miller's proposals regarding rapid transit in this city are gaining support. This was inevitable. The first cries of opposition were too shrill to be kept up. And some of the early misunderstandings or misrepresentations of the Governor's scheme have been cleared away by his later explanations. But the chief strength of his position is that it is positive and definite. He has a plan. In place of it nothing is offered but a mighty maze without a plan. The only way to defeat a concrete project is by bringing forward a substitute. In this case nothing of that sort has even been attempted. All that has been brought forward is hysteria.

There is, indeed, an alternative to the Governor's plan, if not a substitute for it. That alternative is the continuance and worsening of traction conditions already pronounced by the public to be intolerable. Governor Miller may not bring on a millennium. But it is certain that Mayor Hylan, if he could have his way, would bring on a pandemonium. Yet that the people would prefer the latter it is supposed to be a tribute to their intelligence to affirm. Other compliments to their sanity and reasoning powers are implied in the attacks on Governor Miller's plan. It seems to be taken for granted that the people cannot read. Otherwise they might be expected to know what has happened to traction companies in other cities. It is also assumed that they cannot do the simplest sums in arithmetic, and will gapingly believe it when assured that a higher fare would all go to the operating companies instead of, as it must by the contract, to the City Treasury.

This low rating of the mental quality of the people is done by those who profess the deepest respect and reverence for the popular judgment. We believe that they are entirely mistaken. "The people are neither fools nor idiots." That was said long ago; and if it were not still true today, the only kind of rapid transit they would deserve would be down a steep place into the sea.

RAILWAY RATES AND WAGES.

Within the next few days the country will be called upon to make up its mind as to the purpose for which it wishes the railways to be run. Long ago it rejected the notion that the purpose of railways was to enable security manipulators to amass unearned fortunes. Then followed the idea that the railways were run for the purpose of subsidizing shippers' business. It was believed that the railway business was so profitable that rates could be reduced and wages raised simultaneously. That experiment was well advanced toward breaking down when the war came, and the railways were run for the purpose of assisting in the smashing of Germany. The job was done, and the bills are now due for payment. In peace the railways must be run for a different purpose. The workers on the railways think that they should be run for the purpose of paying them higher wages than they could hope to receive in other occupations. In support of the workers' point of view they secured wide publicity for the argument of their expert, a consultant economist. He contends that the railways are diverting to the profits of concerns with which the railways have interlocking Directors funds which belong to the workers rather than to the railways. At this point the question arises for near decision whether the purpose of railways is to raise wages or to provide transportation.

The Esch-Cummins law, with the approval of users of the railways after a harsh experience, establishes the principle that there shall be a fair return to railway investors. Otherwise shippers found that goods could not be shipped, and the loss of profits exceeded any gain from paying rates less than the cost of service. The Congress and the Treasury, too, have been taught by experience that the taxpayers cannot endure the taxes necessary to support a wage scale above what is needed to provide service when the railways are economically and efficiently administered. But the balance between rates and wages is not fixed by such considerations, and the question now ripening toward early decision is whether rates and wages should be raised or lowered together. It took a generation to teach the regulators that rates must move in relation to each other. The relation of rates to wages is not settled yet, but an important step will be taken in the next few days.

Some think that the rates already are so high that they are driving away business to motors and canals, and that they must be reduced to provide the volume of traffic which alone can support present wages. Some think that wages should be stabilized as well as investors' returns, and that rates should be raised if necessary to prevent wage reductions, or even to raise the standard of living for railway workers. If the railways are run for political-social purposes, as adjuncts of the Government for the purpose of raising wages and the standard of living, then the rates should be all that the traffic will bear, and care should be taken that the workers get the money. If the purpose of railways is to provide railway service, then investors' returns, rates and wages should be fixed by the rule of reason, in due relation to each other, care being also taken that none shall be more than the traffic will bear, and that there is no waste in administration of the funds. The decision now due is whether the wage fund is administered as efficiently as the rate fund under the private management of the railways and public fixing of rates. The hearings on the subject have not received the publicity which the railway workers obtained for the alleged diversion of wage money into Directors' pockets in devious ways. But there has been a mass of evidence that wage money has been wasted in the payment of unearned wages, and that this waste is incompatible with the betterment of service. The future of the railways will turn in large degree upon the attitude of public opinion toward these elements of the railway question, now far from settled after a troubled generation of experience.

PREPAREDNESS IN THE AIR.

A business man who has insured his factory for many years does not complain that he has paid premiums for nothing because there has been no destructive fire in his building; nor, if he is a practical man, does he consider insuring his property for $10,000 when it is worth ten times as much. Congress does not look at insurance of the country against the waste of war as sensibly. Constantly are heard complaints that too much money has been spent upon the army and navy for national defense, and when appropriations are wanted to equip a branch of the military service adequately a half or a third is allowed, no matter how good a case is made out for more. Thus the country carries less insurance than it should have, which is bad business.

The House Committee on Appropriations has recommended that $19,200,000 be allowed for army aviation, although Brig. Gen. William Mitchell, Assistant Chief of the Army Air Service, had asked for $60,000,000, of which $17,000,000 was to be spent to equip units with modern airplanes. "Those we have now," he told the House Military Affairs Committee on Jan. 4, "are obsolete, old and becoming unsafe." There was such wastage during the war in building American airplanes on a colossal plan which proved to be a shocking failure that Congress is suspicious when the development of the air service of the army or navy on a modest scale is urged now. And members of Congress, of whom drastic economy in most things is expected, are prone to cut down every estimate asked for with small regard for the need of the appropriation. Even when there is crying need for money for the upkeep of an established and meritorious institution the knife goes through the estimate just the same, often leaving it a remnant. If the appropriation wanted is for national defense, the danger of another war is declared to be remote. Little attention is given to the wisdom of full insurance.

House committees may not accept General Mitchell as the most eminent authority on military aviation, and they may be disposed to turn to others for information about naval aeronautics, but in his appearances before the Military Affairs Committee early in January and the Appropriations Committee last week he surely qualified as an expert both at the front in France and since the war as Assistant Chief of the Army Air Service. What General Mitchell told the committees about the offensive and defensive power of the airplane on sea or land was not new, although more than one Representative seemed to hear it for the first time. Unfortunately there are few members of Congress who make a study of war inventions and preparedness. At the hearing early in January General Mitchell stated that the French were maintaining a force of 3,000 land planes, and that the British, besides keeping up a formidable army flying corps, were acquiring ocean aircraft carriers and developing machines to fight above the water, while the United States lagged behind in aviation. The committees he addressed listened to illustrations of war in the air with wonder or incredulity. How great cities might be gassed from the sky by planes brought to the coast on aircraft carriers, unless there should be a defensive force to drive the enemy off, should have made a profound impression in the telling.

All the horrors described by General Mitchell America may experience if other wars are to be waged and preparedness has been neglected. He pleaded with his hearers for a demonstration of what bombing planes could accomplish in attack upon an obsolete war vessel selected for experiment. That may be the business of the navy, but certainly one of the old battleships of the Spanish War could be spared for a thorough test. And other demonstrations of the destructiveness of bombs dropped from the air would be educational. If Congress can be made to understand the offensive power of aircraft on land and sea, adequate appropriations may not come so hard.

ALARUMS ABOUT JAPAN.

Senator Hiram Johnson doesn't know what the tentative agreement with Japan really is, but that does not prevent him from being violently "agin" it. That he is misinformed concerning its provisions is asserted by Secretary Colby. But rumor and suspicion are enough for the California Senator. In this instance the reason is obvious. He would lose his proprietary political issue if the differences with Japan were to be peacefully composed. And we know that it is better to meet a bear robbed of her whelps than a politician deprived of his issue.

It is safe to say that the run of Americans will not burst into precipitate anger along with Senator Johnson. They will keep calm at least until they know what it is that they are to get excited about. And they will reflect that, in any case, there is no need of dreading the ratification of any Japanese treaty overnight. Prediction that the Senate may act hastily on a treaty would provoke laughter rather than fear. It is certain that the whole matter will go over into the next Administration. Meanwhile, sensible citizens will be glad that the preliminaries to a settlement of our troubles with Japan have been got through successfully. They have not Senator Johnson's interest in keeping the sore from healing, and will go on hoping that, in the end, there may be a diplomatic adjustment of the difficulties between the United States and Japan satisfactory to both countries.

MEASURER OF THE UNIVERSE.

Insatiate Professor Einstein has provided some more light reading for the few but fit thinkers who jauntily turn over the pages of Laplace's "Celestial Mechanics" at breakfast and look on Sir Isaac with condescension. He has a short and easy method to prove that the universe is finite and to calculate its size. Without the faintest notion whether the universe is finite, infinite, or both or neither, the lazy layman may wonder why the philosophers can't be content to assume whatever theory they like and shut up about it. In our green, unknowing youth didn't the metaphysicians tell us that the finite universe was the sum total of everything that exists or can be conceived as existing? That is as clear as black mud, and seems to indicate that the finite universe is infinite; but in playing this game, the players never seem to agree on the definition—ironical term in this business—of "infinite."

Of time and space and the absolute and all that, most speculators may well decline to discourse till they come where, if anywhere, housing conditions are better and time isn't money. Meanwhile, the mathematical infinite is persona non grata to many otherwise best minds, and it is a happiness to be assured by the books that if, world without end, you keep on halving the denominator of an improper fraction—and all fractions ought to be regarded as improper—you get no further than an algebraic record that you can keep on halving forever.

This preliminary Chinese, simpler to us simple-minded than Einsteinism, brings us rather reluctantly to the Professor. He marries his "relativity theory to the Newtonian law of reckoning the average velocity of the stars as that which they must have to prevent the Milky Way from collapsing on itself through reciprocal action." That the stars are sweated to the speed limit to keep the Milky Way from sagging and dropping out lends a new interest to that lacteal belt. Professor Einstein concludes persuasively:

> If the real velocities of stars (the measurement of which could be carried out) were less than the calculated velocities, then it was proved that real gravitation's great distances were smaller than the gravitational distances demanded by the law of Newton. From such divergence the finiteness of the universe could be proved indirectly, and it was even permitted to estimate its size.

In short, by practical geometry you can estimate the size of the theoretical universe. To most of us geometry is not practical but impracticable, and not a tincture of Euclid lingers in our intellectuals. To fictions such as time, space, mathematics, the universe, we should be all the kinder. Mr. Bergson may try to persuade us that space is an order, but it is too large an order for others than the illuminate romancers of physics, metaphysics and mathematics. Yet, whatever else be fictional in a fictional Whole, we believe implicitly in Professor Einstein because of the subtlety of his characters and his plot and the limpidity of his dialogue.

THE PORT PROBLEM.

Governor Miller says that his next message will consider a freight question which comes as close to the city's material prosperity as the transit question does to its personal comfort. If he is as successful in treating the one as the other, the fortune of his administration is secure. His chances for that are good, for the problems are so alike that they yield to similar treatment. In both cases the obstacle to betterment is unreasonable obstruction for political reasons. The difference in the two cases is that the port obstruction is comparatively reasonable, with shadow if not substance of support. We disagree with those who think that the prosperity of either New York or New Jersey depends on something taken from either. A betterment for either can be made a joint betterment, in the Governor's manner. In his transit message he says that the problem is a whole, and should be dealt with by a single authority. But in the port question there is no such police power, or higher jurisdiction, as the State, which the Governor summons to redress the lack of public spirit on the part of the officials in charge.

The port can be unified, and the rivalries and jealousies of the States which control the opposite sides can be ended only by agreement. That is provided for, and well advanced, by the bi-State compact which has been published anew within a day or two, and which has been obstructed as the transit question has been. The engineering problems are vast, and the capital cost exceeds two hundred millions. Expert opinion alone can pass judgment on them, but only common sense is necessary to see that the preliminary inquiry which the Governor seeks in the transit question has been had in the port question, and that the result is attractive, with the presumption in its favor until something contrary appears on authority. New York has poured out treasure for its own benefit, and has been repaid so abundantly that the overflow which benefits New Jersey is not grudged. New York is willing to continue to benefit both, and, in fact, cannot help doing so without injuring itself. But New Jersey ought now to be willing to contribute to the joint fund the use of her natural geographical facilities.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Billions Are Discussed With Ease.

If the Premiers who met in Paris to fix the indemnity that Germany is to pay had been able to mention only the amounts to be paid each year—and to prevent anybody else from figuring up the total—their demand would have seemed, if not exactly small, at least moderate. Of course, the Germans confidently could be expected to protest with vehemence against any amount that might be named. That isn't a new proof of their wickedness, for any nation in like case would do the same thing, and probably the Germans would have been disappointed had more lenience been shown, as then they would have had less hope of getting a reduction of the burdens imposed.

But, of course, the aggregate indemnity had to be announced, and, after all, there is nothing so very appalling in the sound. After getting up into the billions, a few more or less do not strain the mind, partly because few people or none have more than a vague knowledge of what a billion really is and partly because recent years have made the word itself no longer either startling or impressive.

As for millions, they have become no more than small change in not a little of current conversation, even among people to whom $1,000 in real money would mean wealth and $100 all at once would be an unfamiliar possession.

Have They Really a Grievance?

There is a significant passage in the reply made by the Republican delegates attending the convention of the State League of Women Voters to Governor Miller's criticism of that organization. It is worth printing again in full:

> Our experience within the organization of the parties, however, is a humiliating one. It has taught us that there is as yet no real equality in the management of party affairs, nor in the choice of delegates or candidates. We are forbidden to exercise independence or judgment, and are openly advised that there is no place in the party except for those who take orders.

Wounded feelings, if not broken hearts, are revealed by those sorrowful and complaining words. That these estimable and eminent women have been "humiliated" by the men to whom they offered to be (party) sisters will be most surprising to those who know of doings in the inner circles of politics only what the occupants thereof have chosen to make public. For what they have divulged gave a wholly different impression—the impression that the women had received a welcome cordial as well as courteous, and had been invited to take part in all the party activities, including the selection of candidates and the voting for them on election day. In seeming, at least, they were intrusted with power according to their demonstrations of strength, and, as often as newcomers in a political group reasonably could have expected, they were allowed and encouraged to run for office.

A Sudden Loss of Rank.

Looking more closely at and into the phrases by means of which these women formulated their grievance against the old parties, one glimpses—not with any certainty, indeed, and yet clearly enough to warrant forming a theory, a working hypothesis—its real nature.

It is impossible to accept as literally true the statement that they were told only those who would obey orders were wanted in the old parties. Politicians do not talk that way. Instead they emphasize their detestation of "bolters"—their expectation that, within the party, minorities shall submit to majorities, that personal preferences shall be subordinated to party principles and interests.

To all that, presumably, the women were willing to assent—and to abide by it as much as men do, which isn't always completely. But they found themselves subjected to an unfamiliar kind of competition. Their previous achievements did not count in the changed conditions, and those who had been high officers in the other army discovered that they were only privates in the one they had just entered. Promotion to commissions was not denied them, but the promotion would come after a period of obscurity and had to be earned in rivalry with men as fond of place and power and newspaper attention as themselves and much more experienced in getting them as members of a political party.

CLEAR LEAGUE VIEWS.

"Pro-League Republican's" Contribution and Some Further Questions.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to express my appreciation of the remarkable series of articles which you have published from the pen of a "Pro-League Republican." It is a real intellectual treat to read such a clear and logical exposition of the complex conditions surrounding the League of Nations. The Times has rendered a notable public service in publishing such a valuable contribution to a calm and intelligent consideration of the problem, which was impossible in the heat of a political campaign.

I wonder whether the author of these articles would feel disposed to still further clarify the situation by answering these specific questions:

(1) Does not a "super-government" necessarily imply authority superior to the authority of the member nations?

(2) Is it not true that no agreement or undertaking entered into by the member nations among themselves can properly be considered a "super-government"?

(3) Is it not true that the obligations assumed under Articles X. and XVI., and the obligation not to resort to war without arbitration or investigation, merely constitute an exercise of the treaty-making power of individual nations?

(4) As the League has no authority to interpret or enforce the indefinite obligations assumed by its members under Articles X. and XVI., is not each member nation free to determine for itself under what circumstances and in what manner it shall contribute toward the performance of these joint undertakings?

(5) Should not the recent action at Geneva be considered as an expression of the understanding and intention of the members of the League when signing the covenant, rather than a repudiation of their obligations?

The objection to the covenant by the American people has been very generally based upon the belief that it would constitute a "super-government," and that it would place the United States under a moral obligation to go to war or to employ an economic boycott whenever called upon by the League to do so. There is no question, I believe, to which the American people so universally desire a clear, unequivocal answer as the question, Does the League of Nations set up a "super-government," or in any way impair the individual sovereignty of its members? If the author of the remarkable series of articles completed today should find it possible to still further clarify and emphasize the distinction between the normal exercise of treaty-making power by individual nations and the establishment of a super-government by delegation of authority to an extraneous body, it seems to me that he would add to the great contribution which he has already made toward an intelligent understanding of the situation.

WILLIAM G. WILLCOX.

New York, Jan. 28, 1921.

Reply to Ku Klux Charge.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In The New York Times of Sunday, Jan. 23, 1921, certain statements were published, attributed to Colonel William J. Simmons, Imperial Wizard of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, asserting that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is using the Ku Klux Klan "as a cudgel to extort money from members of the negro race for the purpose of carrying on its nefarious purposes and is deluding them with the hope of social and political equality and other wild promises which the backers of the association know never can and never will be fulfilled."

This is an accusation that the National Association is making wild promises which it knows cannot be fulfilled, for the purpose of obtaining money. In other words, that the association is obtaining money under false pretenses.

The purpose and aims of this organization are publicly stated to be the obtaining of the same treatment and the same rights for colored citizens of the United States as are accorded to all other citizens. This office and every detail of its administratoin are at all times open to investigation.

ELM AND LOCUST.

Elm and locust bowed together
On a night of windy weather.

Spoke the groaning locust bole:
"Brother, now is bitter dole!
Are this wrack and anguish sent
Over us for punishment?
This accurst, unresting wind
For that you and I have sinned?
I remember me last Spring—
Full of foolish birds that sing,
When I waved in Summer breeze,
Vainest I of all the trees.
I am punished for that pride.
Brother, would that we had died!"

Spoke the elm: "O Brother Tree,
I am scourged and wrung like thee—
Crack and strain and quake at heart
Till my inmost sinews start.
Not for pride is all our pain.
I was but content, not vain;
Loved my orioles and leaves,
Singing morns and golden eves.
Beauty is our heritage.
Rot is sin in tree or sage.
We were spotted with decay.
See what storm hath flung away!"

Then an oak who overheard
Gave the groaning twain his word:
"Who are we to seek a cause?
Winter hath its cruel laws;
Sendeth sleet and stinging hail;
Wind to winnow, wind to flail.
We are hurt, but we endure.
If our roots are deep and sure,
Till the hurricane's amen
We shall live and leaf again!"

DOROTHY LEONARD.

POPULATION OF BRAZIL.

Statement From the Embassy on the Foreign and Negro Element.

The following statement has been received from the Brazilian Embassy about the article entitled "Colby Tour Allayed Latin Suspicions," which appeared in The New York Times of last Friday:

"In The New York Times for Jan. 28 appears a letter from its correspondent, William H. Crawford, concerning Secretary Colby's visit to South America in which he makes statements concerning Brazil which convey a distinctly wrong impression. He says: 'The conditions in Brazil are peculiar. In the southern part the predominating population is German. Whole colonies and provinces are practically of Teutonic origin. * * * Nearer the Amazon about 85 per cent. of the population are negroes.' As he mentions no other race elements he leaves the impression that the whole population is either German or negro.

"The total number of people in Brazil, according to the census which has just been taken, is about 31,000,000. Brazil was once a Portuguese colony and the great majority of her people are of Portuguese descent. It is estimated that about 12 per cent. of the population are negroes. These are concentrated largely in the four central States of San Paulo, Rio de Janeiro, Minas Geraes and Bahia, especially the latter. In the States to the north of Bahia and particularly in the two great States in the Amazon Valley, Para and Amazonas, the negro element is so small as to be negligible. Mr. Crawford's statement that 'nearer the Amazon about 85 per cent. of the population are negroes' is as misleading as it would be if one who had been writing about the thousands of Irish in New England should say, 'Nearer California about 50 per cent. of the population are negroes.'

"There is a widespread misconception as to the German population of Brazil. It is true that in the three States of the extreme south—Rio Grande do Sul, Parana, and Santa Catharina—there is considerable German blood, but the combined population of these three States, including both the German and the non-German element, is only about 10 per cent. of the total population of the country. Furthermore these people are not immigrants who have recently come from Germany. They are for the most part native Brazilians, and are the children or grandchildren or even the great-grandchildren of immigrants who were induced to settle in Brazil by the Emperor Dom Pedro between 1840 and 1850. In numbers and influence they do not begin to compare with the Italians, hundreds of thousands of whom have migrated to Brazil and among whom are many of Brazil's wealthiest and most prosperous citizens.

"In the period of thirty years ending in 1917 the number of Poles who emigrated to Brazil was 50 per cent. greater than the number of Germans, the Austro-Hungarians outnumbered the Germans, the Spanish immigrants were almost eight times as numerous as the German immigrants, while the Portuguese were more than twelve times as numerous as the Germans. When Mr. Crawford's resounding statement that 'whole colonies and provinces are practically of Teutonic origin' is analyzed in the light of all the facts it is seen that the impression of Teutonic predominance which he conveys is as ill founded as is his impression of negro preponderance in the Amazon Valley, where negroes are almost never seen.

"The exception which is here taken to Mr. Crawford's remarks is confined to the statements above mentioned. What he says about the impression created by Mr. Colby, the cordiality of his reception and the significance of his mission, entirely agrees with the reports that come to the Embassy from Brazil."

WHY DAYLIGHT SAVING?

Mr. Marks Answers the Points Made by Assemblyman Betts.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I answer Assemblyman Betts's twelve statements on daylight saving seriatim?

(1) Yes, daylight saving was adopted as an economic measure at the time of the war. Is that any reason for giving up its advantages now? We paid dearly for war; let us save what we can from its ruins.

(2) Not so! No promise of repeal after war was given by those who fathered this movement.

(3) Yes, Congress acted against daylight saving, but that did not take away the power of the States and cities to regulate their own time.

(4) Yes, you introduced a repeal law in Albany.

(5) Yes, you kindly amended it to give the cities local option.

(6) Yes, Governor Smith vetoed your efforts. You say the farmers vetoed him. Do you forget that Governor Smith, in the face of fearful odds, nearly overrode a national Republican tidal wave? His popularity was astounding, and was due in substantial measure to his brave fight for daylight saving.

(7 and 8) Yes, Congress fixed time zones and daylight saving in 1918.

(9) No, your conclusion against State rights is far-fetched and illogical. If you are right, why not attack the constitutionality of the New York State act instead of introducing repeal bills?

(10) Your quotation that daylight saving "upsets nature's plans," &c., is fossilized. Man, not nature, made clocks and time zones.

(11) You say labor is against daylight saving. This is not so. The President of the New York State Federation of Labor and many locals have publicly voiced enthusiastic support of daylight saving.

(12) The farmer was always a daylight saver. He should not try to keep the cities and towns from enjoying the same health and economic benefits. The State should consider the overwhelming majority first. We have met objections by a compromise of five instead of seven months' daylight saving. We want the greatest possible uniformity in this country and with the twelve European countries that have daylight saving.

No Joke for the Farmers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Every Summer almost every farmer, especially those who live along the State roads, suffers a very considerable loss from robbery of his crops. This stealing is principally done by city dwellers who own automobiles. Of course this is known by many and considered quite a joke, whereas it is a serious matter to the farmer, who toils hard for his crops. I suggest as a title for a Spring sermon for all clergymen, "Thou Shalt Not Steal." If there is doubt in the mind of any minister of the seriousness and extent of this habit let him call up or write the editor of The Rural New Yorker Magazine, 333 West Thirtieth Street, New York City, and learn at first hand the astounding facts.

QUESTIONS SOLDIER BONUS.

Lawyer Cites Constitution in Doubting Bond Issue's Legality.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 30.—With James A. Wendell, State Controller, preparing to float the $45,000,000 bond issue for soldier bonuses, a question is being raised regarding the constitutionality of the grant, which was approved at a referendum in the last election.

James M. Dean, a Jamestown lawyer, has written to Attorney General Newton calling attention to the fact that the grant appears to be in direct conflict with Section 1, Article VII. of the State Constitution, which provides as follows:

"The credit of the State shall not in any manner be given or loaned to or in aid of any individual, association or corporation."

Controller Wendell has been discussing the proposed bond issue with bankers in Wall Street, who have expressed their willingness to take a chance on the bonds, seeing that the proposal had approximately 1,000,000 majority at the polls last November. Now, however, the question has arisen whether, when the bonds mature, some future Controller might not object to taking them up, unless, before they are issued, the question of their legality has been conclusively settled.

At the office of the Attorney General it was said yesterday that Mr. Newton was not prepared to make the letter of Mr. Dean public at this time, but that he would take the subject up with the Governor early this week. It could not be learned whether Controller Wendell had asked the Attorney General for an opinion.

PRINCETONIANS TO GATHER.

Alumni Association Will Meet in St. Louis on Feb. 10.

PRINCETON, N. J., Jan. 30.—The first meeting of the National Alumni Association of Princeton University will be held in St. Louis from Thursday, Feb. 10, to Sunday, Feb. 13. It is expected that every State in the Union will be represented at the convention. Every Princeton alumnus has been invited, and there will be a representative from every class since 1849. St. Louis was chosen because the university's enrollment has always been drawn from the West and South in almost as large proportion as from the East.

The meeting will be opened by Ambrose G. Todd of New York, Chairman of the association. Professor V. Lansing Collins of Princeton will act as secretary. Judge George H. Williams of St. Louis, President of the Western Association of Princeton Clubs, is in charge of the Committee of Arrangements.

The main interest will be focused on the meetings of the Graduate Council, which is the driving force behind the National Association, to be held on Lincoln's Birthday. Among those who have accepted the invitation to be present at the convention are Cyrus H. McCormick of Chicago, James M. Delong of Kansas City, Henry B. Thompson of Delaware, James M. Mitchell of Buffalo, Alexander Van Rensselaer of Philadelphia, Major Francis G. Landon and Knox Taylor of New York and Booth Tarkington of Indianapolis.

VETERANS IN NATIONAL BODY

United States Association Formed Here by 22 Organizations.

Announcement was made yesterday that at a meeting of twenty-two veteran military organizations at the Old Guard Headquarters, 307 West Ninety-first Street, on Saturday, the National Association of the United States Veterans Association was formed. Its purposes, as stated by Major J. W. H. Myrick of the Fusilier Veteran Corps of Boston, are to promote a greater interest in both national and local affairs, to see that school children are not permitted to ignore totally the country's needs in regard to national defense, and to take the lead in disseminating plans that are sponsored by the Army War College in Washington and the War Department.

These officers were elected: President, Major J. W. H. Myrick, Boston; Vice Presidents, Major Edward Havemeyer, Snyder, N. Y.; Major Edward T. Paull, Washington; Secretary, Captain Herbert L. Adams of Worcester, and Treasurer, Captain Clarence J. McKenzie, Boston.

EDUCATORS AID INDUSTRY.

Massachusetts Institute Reports Success—Students Increase.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 30.—Registration at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on Nov. 1, 1920, was 57 per cent. greater than the largest number of students previously enrolled, according to the report of Acting President Elihu Thomson, made public tonight. The registration on that date was 3,078.

The successful operation of the "Technology plan," by which manufacturers and contractors may submit problems to the institute for expert solution, was reported by the division of industrial cooperation and research. The plan was put into effect early in 1920. Up to Nov. 3 the division handled 406 queries from 204 contracting companies and the retaining fees amounted to more than $250,000.

TELLS OF FEEDING VIENNESE

Council Distributed $2,558,000 in Last Ten Months of 1920.

The European Relief Council here announced yesterday that 135,574 packages of food, valued at $2,558,000, had been distributed among needy families in Vienna in the last ten months of 1920. Most of this food was intended for children.

One class of the food parcels were valued at $50 each, and contained condensed milk, flour, rice, bacon, lard and corned beef, sufficient to feed one person for ten months, when the regular Government food ration is added. Another class of packages was valued at $10 each, and differed from the first class in that cottonseed oil was substituted for the lard and corned beef.

To carry on this relief work the council is now engaged in a campaign to raise $33,000,000 in this country.

ZURICH, Jan. 29.—More than eighty members of the society known as Swiss Friends of the United States have just held their first annual dinner here. Consul General Murphy was a guest of honor, and Dr. Sulzer, formerly Swiss Minister in Washington, who could not attend, wrote reminding the Friends of the United States that 200,000 Swiss living in America contrived to be useful members of their communities and yet remained loyal to Switzerland.

As a compliment to the United States the dishes at the dinner were supposed to be American, but the wines and liquors were Swiss and French.

PEKING, Jan. 30.—After three months' interruption of communications caused by the Russian incursion into Mongolia, the wireless station at Urga is now able to communicate with Peking. This marks the successful completion of the first span of the longest overland wireless telegraph route in the world.

The Marconi Company is under contract to construct stations at Urumchi [in the Chinese Province of Sungaria, Central Asia] and Kashgar [in Eastern Turkestan], for which construction parties are being organized.

REPUBLICANS MOVE FOR REFORM IN SOUTH

Hays Names Committee to Find Solution of Negro Problem in the Party.

DRASTIC CHANGES EXPECTED

Members Will Report Scheme for Reapportionment of Delegates to Conventions.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Chairman Will H. Hays of the Republican National Committee announced today the appointment of a committee which will take up the work of reorganizing the Republican Party in the Southern States. While no intimation was given of the course to be followed, a statement issued from Republican National Headquarters asserted that "a complete reconstruction in that region" might result.

The action was taken by Mr. Hays in compliance with resolutions adopted by the Republican National Committee just before the last national convention in Chicago, and by the convention itself. The Committee on Reconstruction will consist of Representative C. Bascom Slemp of Virginia, Earl Kinsley, Committeeman from Vermont; R. B. Howell, Committeeman from Nebraska; Will H. Hays, ex-officio Chairman, and Clarence B. Miller, ex-officio Secretary.

Today's announcement, after quoting the resolutions adopted at Chicago, reads:

"Carrying out the direction and authority contained in the foregoing provisions, Chairman Will H. Hays has just appointed the committee called for to make an investigation of the Republican Party in the South, with recommendations for such changes as will be for the betterment of the party, and to make a recommendation to the National Committee regarding the apportionment of delegates to the next Republican convention.

"A thorough consideration will be made of conditions as related to the Republican Party in the several States and localities in the South, in order that full information may be available upon which to base a decision. It will be noted that this very likely may result in something of a revolution in Republican Party organizations in the South; perhaps even a complete reconstruction in that region. Anyhow, all sides of the matter will be thoroughly investigated and an earnest and patriotic attempt made to perform a useful service not only to the Republican Party but to the country. The committee will meet at an early date and proceed with the work."

Efforts Made for Years.

Efforts of some elements in the Republican Party have been made for many years to bring about reforms in the representation from the South. Fights before the National Committee over the contesting delegations have frequently stirred up scandals and bitterness of feeling. The situation became so acute at the last National Convention that it was decided to hold the contest hearings in the open. The picture then presented greatly strengthened the demands of those who sought reforms.

The reconstruction proposed involves the negro question, and as the Republican Party has great strength among the negroes of the northern tier of States, there has been hesitancy about adopting any policy of representation from the South which would help to build up a white Republican Party there. But it seems probable that some drastic steps to end the Southern delegate scandals now will be taken.

Representative Slemp, Mr. Kinsley and Mr. Howell have all made extensive studies of the problem. Mr. Howell has been on several committees making inquiries into conditions in the South.

The resolutions adopted at Chicago presented by Henry S. Jackson of Georgia are quoted in today's announcement as follows:

"Whereas it is increasingly apparent that the so-called 'solid South' is, in fact, on economic issues strongly inclined to the principles of the Republican Party; and,

"Whereas it is obvious, from the repeated contests before the National Committee and other facts no less noteworthy, that Republican votes in these States are not increasing in proportion to the increasing belief in Republican principles;

"Be it Resolved, That the Chairman of the Republican National Committee appoint a special committee of three of its members of which the Chairman and Secretary are to be ex officio members, one of whom shall be from the South, who shall very carefully and impartially study the whole political situation in the South, and also its relation to that in the North, with a view of reporting, at the next meeting of the National Committee, or as soon as the special committee thus appointed shall be ready, how the Republican Party in the States of the South may be reorganized or constituted to make it a more effective agent for the spreading and recording of Republican principles and of electing Republican Electors."

To Change Representation.

"A few days thereafter," says the announcement, "and on June 12, just before it adjourned, the Republican National Convention at Chicago adopted the following resolution, which was moved by the Hon. Paul Howland of Ohio, Chairman of the Committee on Rules and Order of Business:

"'Resolved, That, in order to effect proper and necessary changes in the present apportionment of delegates in proportion to the Republican vote actually cast at general elections throughout the various States of the Union, and in order to inspire a greater effort to erect and maintain substantial party organizations in all the States, the National Committee, notwithstanding any rule heretofore adopted, is hereby authorized and directed, within twelve months from the date of the adjournment of this convention, to adopt a just and equitable basis of representation in future national conventions, which basis shall be set forth in the call for the next convention and be binding upon the same and all other future conventions until otherwise ordered.'"

CANNON PRAISES GIBBONS.

Felicitates Cardinal in Letter Upon Improvement in Health.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 30.—Cardinal Gibbons has received this letter from "Uncle Joe" Cannon of the House of Representatives:

"I want to express my great pleasure over your recovery from your recent illness. I have been under the weather myself for several weeks and unable to read the newspapers. I remained in ignorance of your illness until I learned of your recovery.

"I am sure the American people, regardless of church affiliation, unite with your own mother church in giving thanks for your restoration to health, with the promise of many more years of your great Christian influence."

URGES MORE UNIVERSITIES.

Dean Smith of Cornell Predicts Federal Higher Education.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 30.—The prediction that the United States Government would have to build universities because of lack of sufficient institutions of higher education was made by Dean Albert W. Smith, Acting President of Cornell University, here last night.

"The whole tendency of the times is for universities to become overcrowded," said Dean Smith. "Twice as many students as can be taken care of properly clamor for education. There must be a limit to the number of students."

Dean Smith spoke before members of the Cornell Alumni Association of Southern Ohio.

MRS. SHERIDAN HERE WITH SOVIET BUSTS

English Artist Says Lenin Used Vanderlip to Play U. S. Against England.

TELLS OF HER EXPERIENCES

Resents Impression Among Passengers That She Is Propagandist—Drags Her Own Trunks.

Mrs. Clare Sheridan, the English artist who spent a month modeling busts of Lenin and Trotzky and described the experience vividly in her diary, which was published in THE NEW YORK TIMES, arrived here yesterday on the Cunarder Aquitania with the finished portraits in bronze of the two Soviet leaders. She is here to lecture about her month in Moscow.

Mrs. Sheridan talked interestingly of Lenin, Trotzky, Wells, Washington B. Vanderlip, the late John Reed and others whom she saw in Moscow during the month in which the two leading figures of Bolshevist Russia sat for her.

From what she heard and saw Mrs. Sheridan was convinced that Washington B. Vanderlip allowed himself to be made the unconscious tool of Lenin. The paper grant of vast Siberian concessions to Vanderlip was a device, in her opinion, to scare the British Government into trade relations with Soviet Russia. Lenin also made use of H. G. Wells, she said, in furtherance of his scheme to frighten British commercial interests with the picture of an American-Russian commercial entente.

Played United States Against England.

Vanderlip, she said, sought to guard the secret of his concessions. This did not suit the purposes of Lenin, who wished to play the United States against England, so Lenin told the story of the Vanderlip Siberian grant to Wells, that the news might be broken to the British people.

"While I was in Moscow I learned from an absolutely reliable authority," she said, "that, when Lenin was telling this to Wells, another member of the Soviet Government interrupted to say:

"'Are you not indiscreet?'"

Lenin looked up calmly and replied: "No, I am not indiscreet," according to her informant. A few days later the news of a concession on a scale almost unknown since the days of Ferdinand and Isabella burst on the world.

Mrs. Sheridan was reluctant to speak of John Reed, for fear of offending some of those who cherish his memory, but she was induced to tell of him on the plea that he was a public character whose name had passed into the history or "mythology" of Soviet Russia.

"The truth is that he was not taken seriously in Moscow," she said. "He was not regarded as of importance by members of the Government. Possibly his manner was too flippant. At any rate, he failed to gain their confidence or make a deep impression there."

Has a Girlish Presence.

Others passengers on the Aquitania who met the young woman on the voyage were surprised to learn that she was the Mrs. Sheridan who had become a celebrity overnight by the publication of her diary. This was due to the impression she makes at first glance, an impression which she, as a professional woman, deplores. She has the complexion of a girl in her 'teens and a debutante type of countenance.

"It has been my greatest handicap all through my career," she said, speaking of her childlike appearance, "but it did me good [illegible] in a way. At least, I did not look like a spy, or like one that would bother her head much about politics."

It is not only in her writing and sculpture that Mrs. Sheridan overcomes the "handicap" of this impression of immaturity and helplessness. On the pier, the versatile sculptress dragged with one hand huge and heavy trunks full of bronze statesmen's heads and other things, distancing professional porters and scorning offers of assistance. She had got used to heavy porterage in handling her precious things on the way out of Russia.

She was accompanied on the voyage by her five-year-old son, Richard Brinsley Sheridan, the great-great-great-grandson of the author of "The School for Scandal" and the great-great-great-great-grandson of the famous Tom Sheridan, the vindictive and irreconcilable enemy of Dr. Johnson. The boy is also a descendant of John Lothrop Motley on the side of his father, now dead.

Met by Maxine Elliott.

Another woman of slender figure, considerably "handicapped" by an impression of extreme youth, boarded the Aquitania on its arrival, tripped lightly up the main companionway and kissed Mrs. Sheridan. This was Maxine Elliot.

Mrs. Sheridan was surprised to find out that she had been whispered about on the ship as a "Soviet" propagandist and that similar things had been rumored on shore. She said she had only been accused of being a propagandist on one occasion before this trip and this was by an American diplomatic officer, who said the fact that she had not been imprisoned and executed in Moscow raised a presumption against her.

"I hate and loathe the word propaganda," she said. "I am an artist only and have nothing to do with politics. The only reason that I am here today is that I did my own work and did not mix in politics."

Mrs. Sheridan got her chance to go to Moscow for the Lenin and Trotzky portraits through Kameneff, a member of the Soviet mission to England, who sat for her in London. She said the suggestion came from him. Regarding it as a unique opportunity for an artist, she leaped at the chance. Not a single portrait, she said, had been made during the French Revolution of any of its great actors. Speaking of her reception by the Bolshevist heads, she said:

"They resented at first the fact that I was bourgeois. This was especially so of Lenin. The first time I saw Lenin he asked, 'How many hours a day do you work in London?' When I said seven his attitude changed toward me. I had justified my existence. He took little interest in my work, and apparently only tolerated it out of loyalty to Kameneff, who had promised that Lenin should pose for me. When it was over he said it was the only portrait of himself that he would ever allow to be made, that he would never pose again.

Warned by Bolsheviki.

"In time I was regarded in a friendly way by most of those I saw. I was a woman and about the only one who was well dressed and not half starved. But I was told frankly that, while they liked me, this would not prevent them from putting me to death without a qualm if I stood in their way.

"I paid strict attention to my work and showed no interest in anything else. Twice I felt that I was under suspicion and was very much frightened. The atmosphere everywhere was one of intense and constant suspicion. Moscow was full of spies. Traps might have been set to discover whether I was a spy or not, but if so, I knew nothing of it. They could have said, 'Take her out and shoot her,' in my presence, but if they had said it in Russian I could not have understood it."

Mrs. Sheridan said that as far as she could observe the Bolshevist leaders lived on the poorest of fare and were half-starved. Her hosts, the Kameneffs, she said, fed on rice, cabbage soup, the meat of animals which she could not identify and on black bread, wet and sticky enough to adhere to the wall on slight pressure. While expressing admiration for the work of Wells, Mrs. Sheridan said she thought his attempt to sum up and draw conclusions about Russia was a mistake.

"I don't think it is safe to attempt to draw conclusions about Russia," she said. "You can only look at it with interest and ask, 'What is this terrible thing?'"

Bolshevist Leaders Loyal.

Mrs. Sheridan said she found the Bolshevist officials and leaders very loyal to one another. This loyalty, combined with the fact that those in power now hold all the money and organized force in Russia, explain the continuance of Bolshevist rule.

"The only future that I can see for Russia is from the inside, by evolution from the present system. Russia is moving a little to the 'Right.' It touched the extreme 'Left' and is turning back. England, France and other European countries are moving to the 'Left,' that is toward radicalism."

Mrs. Sheridan said she wrote her diary with no thought that it would be published.

"When I got the chance to go to Russia," she said, "I did not let it become known, because I knew that friends would try to dissuade me. I confided it only to one friend. I had kept a diary all my life and continued to do so without the faintest idea of printing it. But the friend I had confided in happened to be a friend of Sir Stuart Campbell, the new Managing Director of The London Times, and on my arrival at Newcastle they came and practically took it from me."

Trotzky Sat for Twenty Hours.

Mrs. Sheridan said Trotzky was less revolting than he appeared to be in many of his pictures. He sat for her twenty hours and spent much of the time criticising her work and descanting on what art should be, Mrs. Sheridan said, until she had to threaten to abandon the work.

"The work was difficult," she said, "because Trotzky consists of three people. First, there is the statesman, the dignified leader. Then he is the litterateur, the theorist in art and letters. Then he has got a mischievous mood and will not be serious. He laughs about everything."

When she was in Moscow, Mrs. Sheridan said, the Bolshevist leaders were in an amiable frame of mind toward America, were under the impression that they had a friend in Senator Harding and expected speedy recognition from this country.

"I imagine that the deportation of Martens has changed that," she said.

Mrs. Sheridan, who is American by birth, was last here in 1910. She will lecture at Aeolian Hall next Friday evening and on the afternoon of Feb. 9.

PLANS BIG OUTDOOR CLUB.

Rye Country Club to Build Up Park Estate After British Models.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Jan. 30.—The estate of George C. Park, which is to be the home of the Rye Country Club, located on the Boston Post Road at Rye, N. Y., will be converted into a big outdoor club. It will differ from all other clubs of its kind in this country, in that it will have about 1,000 members when fully organized and will be modeled after two of the world's best-known country clubs, the Ranelagh, near London, and the Glen Eagles, near Edinburgh.

An option has been taken on the estate of William Porter Allen, adjacent to the Park estate, which will give a combined area of 150 acres. The Park residence will be used as a club house. Plans have been made for the addition of a ballroom to accommodate 300 couples, with bachelors' quarters, shower baths and gymnasium. Under the ballroom will be a large grill, locker rooms and swimming pool.

Other buildings on the property are to be remodeled for boat houses, caddies and employes. The property extends, with a gradual slope, down to the waters of Milton Harbor, where a swimming pool and bathing beach will be located.

One of the most important features will be the golf course to be laid out by Devereaux Emmet. It will be an eighteen-hole course with a nine-hole approaching and putting course and an eighteen-hole putting green. A natural pond on the property will be utilized as a golf hazard in Summer and for skating in the Winter.

ENGAGEMENTS.

Miss Florence Gunnison to Wed Charles H. Brown Jr.

The engagement has been announced of Miss Florence Gunnison, daughter of Herbert F. Gunnison, publisher of The Brooklyn Daily Eagle, to Charles H. Brown Jr., of East Orange, N. J.

Mr. and Mrs. William J. Moore of Bronxville, N. Y., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Kathryn Hall Moore, to Samuel Edward Giudici, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Giudici of Forest Hills, L. I., and a graduate of the New York University. The wedding is planned for next Autumn.

Dr. John Ridlon and Mrs. Ridlon of Chicago announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Margaret Ridlon, to Lieutenant William Dirk Van Ingen, Seventh Cavalry, U. S. A., now stationed at Fort Bliss, Texas.

The engagement is announced of William Barlow Ware, son of Dr. E. J. Ware and Mrs. Ware of 323 West Eighty-third Street, New York, to Miss Katherine Effinger, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Effinger of Washington, D. C. The wedding will probably not take place before next Autumn.

LOUISE E. WENDEL TO WED.

Justice's Daughter to Marry Howard M. Snell at the Astor Wednesday.

The wedding of Miss Louise Elizabeth Wendel, a daughter of Justice Louis Wendel of the City Court, and Howard M. Snell of Elizabeth, N. J., will take place at the Astor on Wednesday, Feb. 2, at 7 o'clock. The Rev. William Kopchen of St. Luke's Evangelical Lutheran Church will officiate.

Miss Wendel is a sister of Miss Kathryn A. Wendel, who was recently admitted to the bar and is practicing law in New York.

Mr. Snell enlisted in the United States Army and was attached to the Fifth Machine Gun Battalion, Second Division, and served at Fort Troyon and Belleau Wood, where he was hit by a shell and severely wounded.

Concert in Aid of Diet Kitchen.

A concert for the benefit of the New York Diet Kitchen Association and the Maternity Centre Association is to take place at 11 o'clock Thursday morning, Feb. 3, in the Waldorf-Astoria ballroom. Florence Easton is to sing and Robert Schmitz, French pianist, and George Meader, tenor, are on the program. Those interested include Mrs. John Henry Hammond, Mrs. W. B. Osgood Field, Mrs. Henry White, Mrs. Ogden Reid, Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James, Mrs. Alfred Duane Pell, Mrs. Abram I. Elkus, Mrs. Otto H. Kahn, Mrs. Henry Villard and Miss Mabel Choate.

RABBIS DENOUNCE CHESTERTON BOOK

Dr. Schulman Says Anti-Semitic Utterances in 'The New Jerusalem' Are 'Thoroughly False.'

CALLS IT 'ROMANTICISM'

Brilliant Work Vitiated by an Unnecessary Persecution of the Jew, Dr. Schulman Asserts.

Anti-Semitic utterances of G. K. Chesterton in his book, "The New Jerusalem," were denounced in two sermons in this city yesterday. Rabbi Samuel Schulman at Temple Beth-El, Fifth Avenue and Seventy-sixth Street, declared that the book was "thoroughly false—a pure reactionary romanticism." Rabbi Nathan Krass of Central Synagogue, Fifty-fifth Street and Lexington Avenue, asserted that Mr. Chesterton's attempt to interpret the Jew disclosed that he "was willing to sacrifice truth to an epigram."

"The Jew is a greater paradox than any uttered by Mr. Chesterton," said Dr. Krass. "In his latest book, 'The New Jerusalem,' Mr. Chesterton gives a concrete illustration of his recent lecture on the ignorance of the educated. His attempt to interpret the Jew reveals the lamentable fact that this brilliant journalist is willing to sacrifice truth to an epigram and his moral appreciation to a paradox.

"Mr. Chesterton asseverates that the Jew is an Oriental, that every nation makes a big mistake in endeavoring to assimilate the Jew, for he is always an alien. I would like to ask Mr. Chesterton what he thinks of the Bible—both the Old and New Testaments—products of this Oriental people. I would like to know if he thinks Western civilization, which has drawn its inspiration from the Bible, and democracy particularly, which grounds itself upon the lofty ideals in Holy Writ, indicate that the Jew cannot possibly be treated other than an alien in the Western Hemisphere.

Mentions Disraeli and Reading.

"Is it not a significant fact that twice England chose Jews to the very highest positions—first Disraeli, who certainly interpreted the English spirit at all times, and, second, Lord Reading, who has been chosen to rule over India, where the Aryan civilization exists?

"Mr. Chesterton favors a peculiar kind of Zionism. Submitting to the call of the paradox, he says that the success of the Jew in Palestine will be measured by his failure. He means by this that in proportion as the Jews increase in manual work and decrease in intellectual and spiritual labor will they be deserving of the term 'success.' Why does not Mr. Chesterton dig trenches or labor in the coal mines? The answer is simple—because God gifted him with a brilliant brain. Why should Mr. Chesterton expect the Jew whom God has gifted with intellectual and spiritual power to do manual labor?

"His further assumption that the Jews are all masters of commerce and princes in finance is certainly fallacious, when one looks the world over and notices that the vast majority of Jews are not princes, but paupers.

"The American Jew protests against any, even the wildest, insinuation that he is an alien in this great country. The American Jew has given and always will give of his wealth, of his power, of his possession, yea, of his life, for his country. Religiously the American Jew is loyal to the Torah, which is the symbol of Judaism. Traditionally he is faithful to his family, hailing from Abraham who wandered in the Khaldees. Politically and nationally he claims the Stars and Stripes as his flag, for which he is willing to die, with which he is proud to live."

Says Book Is Thoroughly False.

Rabbi Schulman said of Chesterton's "The New Jerusalem":

"This work is a brilliant book, disfigured by a constitutional Jew-baiting, which in its disgracefulness is simply disheartening. It is one of those books which, because of the magnificent powers of the writer, do the most harm, for it is thoroughly vitiated by an unreasoning and immoral persecution of the Jew.

"The worst kind of Jew-baiting is not that of the mob, but that of the false literary prophets of the age, which subtly attempts to instil poison into the minds of those who may become leaders of the mob. It is therefore a humiliating, even if a necessary task, to dissect this latest attempt of the well-known anti-Semite. It is necessary because, as Jews and as Americans, we must protest against the attempt to transplant to our country the artificially fostered animosities against the Jew which flourish in Europe.

"Chesterton, of his own volition, undertakes to bless, if not the Jews, the Zionists and ends by cursing them. He professes to agree with the Zionists and yet, in every line of his description of what he saw in Palestine, he bristles with suspicion, with insults, with threats and with opposition to the Zionists' efforts. His is a book thoroughly false, and its falsity is all the more dangerous because of its attractiveness. It is false because it is a pure reactionary romanticism.

"Never have I read a book that is so unfair to the Jew. His generalizations about Jews are that they are usurpers and traitors. Yet the masses of the Jews are in dire poverty all over the world. Chesterton does not believe that a Jew can love his country. He only admits that they can be good citizens. He says that no Jew could die for his country. He doubts that, if England would have been threatened with destruction, Disraeli would have remained with her. He intimates delicately that he would have taken a steamer and crossed the ocean and become a candidate for President in America.

"According to him, a Jew is a stranger in a strange land. He is consumed with jealousy. He thinks that the rise of a man like the Earl of Reading is injurious to his country.

"I am not a Zionist, and one of the reasons why I am not is that I have always felt that Zionism would coax from every hole an anti-Semitic serpent. I will not do Mr. Chesterton the favor of becoming a Zionist."

When informed last night of the attack on his book by Rabbis Schulman and Krass, Mr. Chesterton said: "If they can read all the chapters on the Jews and think it fanaticism, then all the fanaticism is on their side."

CHESTERTON TALKS ON FADS

Admits, in Answer to Query, That Employers Won't Work.

In the midst of a lecture on "Fads" at the Times Square Theatre last night, Gilbert K. Chesterton announced himself as "a revolutionist who thinks that the present capitalist composition of society cannot last, as it is cruel in conception and servile in aim." Then he directed his wit against the "highly idealistic reformer, the advanced person, progressive people, watchers for the dawn and all that lot."

Mr. Chesterton's digression into the field of economics furnished the basis for many questions at the conclusion of his talk. In answer to one he said the condition under which citizens politically free were obliged to live as wage earners without property would either disappear and give way either to a system of society where all would become capitalists or to the institution of slavery.

"Ah, but some people will not work at all and some will work very hard," argued a man in evening dress in the front row. "I will admit that a large part of the employing class will not work," replied the speaker. Gelett Burgess introduced Mr. Chesterton.

Mr. Chesterton's last lecture in New York will be given next Sunday night. He will speak on "Literature as Luggage."

Henry P. Davison Not Ill.

J. FRANCIS MURPHY DIES OF PNEUMONIA

Noted Landscape Painter Succumbs in Roosevelt Hospital After Three Days' Illness.

John Francis Murphy, landscape painter, died yesterday in Roosevelt Hospital, after a short illness from pneumonia. He caught cold last Thursday and was removed from his home at 108 West Fifty-seventh Street to the hospital on Friday night. Services will be held on Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock at the Fine Arts Federation, 215 West Fifty-seventh Street.

Mr. Murphy was born in Oswego, N. Y., Dec. 11, 1853. The background of his early years was one of poverty and he educated himself in art. He said in later years: "I painted the woods I saw as a boy."

He came to New York in 1875. His output was not large. He painted ten or a dozen pictures a year, putting into them well-considered workmanship and a rooted preference for a certain type of scene. Indian Summer had a peculiar charm for him and he produced many canvases evoking its mellowness of mood.

His work has been liked by collectors and at the time of the Leslie Ward sale, when he was asking $650 for pictures of a certain size, a similar picture by him in the Ward collection sold for $2,600. Mr. Evans bought his "Hillside Farm" for less than $1,000 and in the Evans sale it brought $4,000.

He began in 1900 to interest himself in new problems of light and air and a more austere type of subject than the scenes that occupied his early attention. Eight months of the year he lived in the country without touching brush to canvas, working on the farm, and soaking in impressions of nature which in the Winter he turned into pictorial form.

Mr. Murphy was an exhibitor at the National Academy of Design, 1876, won the second Hallgarten prize in 1885 from the National Academy of Design, and the Webb prize in 1887. He became an associate in the National Academy of Design in 1885, and has been academician since 1887. He was a member of the Water Color Society. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Ada Clifford Murphy.

WILMER STUART DEAD.

Associated Press Market Editor and Director of Election Service.

Wilmer Stuart, market editor and director of the election service of The Associated Press died of pneumonia at the Hotel St. George, Brooklyn, yesterday, after a week's illness.

For many years he had been in immediate charge of the development and extension of The Associated Press election service, which he had helped organize. This work and his duties as head of the market division took him to almost every section of the country.

Mr. Stuart also had been in full charge of the financial and commercial branch of Reuters, Limited, for twenty years, and for three years was chief of that section of the Kokusai News Agency of Japan.

Until the outbreak of the great war he also was in charge of the financial and commercial service of the Wolff News Bureau of Berlin.

His services as chief of the co-operative election service of The Associated Press, especially in the last general election, won universal praise from its membership.

Mr. Stuart was one of the oldest employes of The Associated Press in point of service. He entered the market department as an office boy in 1883, and ten years later became its head. He was born in Brooklyn in 1869. He left a widow and one son, Wilmer, who now is in Cuba. His home was in Westfield, N. J.

DR. GEORGE F. STEVENS DEAD

Dr. George Thomas Stevens, an authority on diseases of the eye, who had been in practice in this city since 1880, died yesterday at his residence, 350 West Eighty-eighth Street, at the age of 88. He was born in Essex County, N. Y., and educated in the schools of this State, but received his medical degree from the Castleton (Vt.) Medical College in 1857. His professional record in the Civil War was a distinguished one.

At first commanding surgeon for the Seventy-seventh New York Volunteers, he later served through the campaigns of the Army of the Potomac for more than two years as operating surgeon of his division, and for several months as medical inspector of the Sixth Army Corps. After the war he was for five years professor of physiology and eye diseases at Union University.

His treatise on "Functional Diseases of the Nervous System" in 1883 won the highest award of the Belgian Royal Academy of Medicine.

COL. JAMES S. KEPPEL DEAD.

Blood Transfusion From Son Fails to Save Volunteers' Commander.

Colonel James S. Keppel, commanding officer of the Volunteers of America in the New York district, died late yesterday afternoon at his home in Westwood, N. J. He had been ill only four days with blood poisoning that followed the bursting of a varicose vein in his leg. Blood was transfused from one of his sons in vain. Colonel Keppel was born in Ireland fifty-seven years ago, and had formerly been at the head of the Volunteers in California.

General Ballington Booth, leader of the organization, said last night:

"The loss of Colonel Keppel will be felt in Volunteer circles throughout the country. His death has left us all stunned. He was a director of the corporation as well as commander of the New York district."

ISRAEL—Rt. Rev. Rogers. A requiem eucharist in memory of the late Bishop of Erie in Trinity Chapel, West 25th St., near Broadway, on Tuesday, Feb. 1, at 8 A. M.

KIEHL—In sad and loving memory of my wife, Dorothy, who died Jan. 31, 1920.
Geo. A. Kiehl.

NEWMAYR—In sacred and cherished memory of our dear beloved Frank, who entered life Eternal Jan. 31, 1920.
In the faith of him who saw
The Eternal morning rise,
Through the open gates of pearl,
On the hills of paradise;
Words of sweetest promise spoken
Only where the dirge is sung,
Where the "golden bowl" is broken,
And the "silver chord" unstrung.
Faith shall, like an evening star,
Faintly tremble through the gloom,
Hope and memory shall sit
Like Angels by the tomb.

HARRIMAN NATIONAL BANK
Fifth Avenue and 44th Street
NEW YORK

George T. Wilson, newly elected Vice President of the Harriman National Bank, has been connected with The Equitable Life Assurance Society for 45 years, entering its employ as an office boy at $3 per week in 1875 and progressing through various offices to Vice President.

Through his activities on various committees, Mr. Wilson has been a familiar figure in the public eye of New York. He took a prominent part in the Liberty Loan campaigns, especially in the Fourth Loan, when he conducted the campaign at the Altar of Liberty in Madison Square, and in the Victory Note drive at Victory Way on Park Avenue. In 1917 he served as Vice President with the late Joseph H. Choate on a committee of citizens to welcome Marshal Joffre and the visiting French War Mission, and Mr. Balfour and the British War Mission; as Vice Chairman of other committees of citizens appointed by Mayor Mitchel for the reception of other visiting War Missions, including the Belgian, Japanese, and Italian; and as an officer on the Mayor's Committee of National Defense. Mr. Wilson was decorated for distinguished war services by the King of Belgium, the King of Greece and the King of Montenegro.

The new Vice President of the Harriman National Bank is a member of many clubs and societies, including the Pilgrims, the well known and successful Anglo-American Society, of which he was one of the organizers in London and New York, and for sixteen years was Chairman of the Executive Committee of the New York Pilgrims.

The Harriman National Bank considers itself fortunate in obtaining Mr. Wilson's services, which will undoubtedly prove an important factor in the growth of the bank.

THE PLAY

By Alexander Woollcott.

Miss George's Comedy.

THE NEW MORALITY, a comedy in three acts, by Harold Chapin. At the Playhouse.

Colonel Ivor Jones........Warburton Gamble
Betty Jones........Grace George
Geoffrey Belasis, K. C........Ernest Lawford
Alice Meynell........Lillian Kemble Cooper
Wallace Wister........Lawrence Grossmith
Wooton........John Gray
Ernestine........Kathleen Andrus

Grace George will inaugurate at the Playhouse this afternoon a series of matinees devoted to a diverting, little, tea-tray, English comedy written by the late Harold Chapin, the American-born playwright of London habitat who was killed at the battle of Loos, just at a time when his pieces for the theatre were beginning to make some little name for him on both sides of the Atlantic. This one is called "The New Morality." It could scarcely have been written for Miss George, and yet it might have been, so perfectly is its mood and humor and its daintiness suited to that vein of half-mischievous, half-plaintive comedy which is peculiarly hers.

Last night, when the play received its first New York performance in the new fashion of Sunday premières, the honors were even between herself and Lawrence Grossmith, who was capital as one of those vague and distraught Englishmen that have added so greatly to the gayety of nations. In his long, final scene of mild intoxication, which provides the climax for the third act, he is enormously amusing.

The new morality is expounded in a houseboat on the Thames. Colonel Ivor Jones, loitering a long while waiting for a staff appointment, has been haunting the Wister houseboat nearby all Summer, running errands for Mrs. Wister and making a lapdog spectacle of himself for the amusement of the whole river and the intense annoyance of Mrs. Jones. As far as could be gathered in the resultant excitement, the crisis seems to have been reached when she heard that he had trotted into the village to get a package of hairpins for Mrs. Wister. At least, it was at this point that Mrs. Jones rowed over to the Wister houseboat and told Muriel Wister just what she thought of her, told her plainly and roughly and so audibly that it ruffled the water, agitated the swans and vastly entertained all passers-by on both banks.

All this has befallen before the beginning of the play, which busies itself exclusively with such burning questions as to whether Mrs. Jones will apologize (which seems grossly improbable), as to whether a criminal libel action lies, and if so, whether Mrs. Jones would rather spend six months in prison than apologize to Muriel Wister. The case is taken under advisement by Mrs. Jones's brother, a K. C., who comes hurrying down from London in response to a telegram sent discreetly by one of the servants and reading as follows: "Fancy your sister wants to see you." As the telegraph office misconstrued this to read: "Fancy! Your sister wants to see you," the K. C. arrives in a bit of a huff and the case is further complicated by Mr. Wister coming over full of demands. Unfortunately he soon becomes so full of '46 brandy and cointreau that he forgets and stays for dinner, thus compromising his wife's case most painfully.

This much of the trifle of Mr. Chapin's plot is unfurled for inspection, just to show of what scanty stuff he has fashioned this play, which falls nicely into the tradition of "The Liars," and, by virtue of its amiable wit, is kept almost continuously entertaining. Its tenuous thread threatens to snap altogether in the extremely desultory second act. Or so it seemed last evening, but this, perhaps, was due to an exceptionally trying performance by Warburton Gamble as the offending Jones. He was leaden-footed throughout, but as he seemed to be preoccupied with the hazardous pursuit of missing lines, there is some reason to hope he will be more helpful to "The New Morality" later on when they are off his mind. Ernest Lawford and Lillian Kemble Cooper complete the quintet of a cast that has a piquant and pleasing comedy to fool with for a time.

Last Saturday night witnessed a tentative experiment at converting the Century Theatre into a home for Drury Lane melodrama. At least a piece of that stripe, an opus of about the level and flavor of "The Whip," was imported from Paris by way of London and exposed to view at the Century.

Doubtless it was selected because its second act calls for a naval engagement, and it may have seemed a pity for the Century, with its roomy stage, to let slip such a chance for large and acrobatic scenery. The second scene of that act is on the bridge at midnight, with the guns booming, the signal lights winking and the seamen charging up and down the companion ways through the smoke. Momentarily, it is quite illusive, and, for the gun-shy, almost painfully suspensive. Perhaps, too, the selection was further influenced by the novelty of producing a war play, even a somewhat staled one, that dealt not with the French Army, but with the French Navy—a novelty so ingratiating that it seemingly overcame the natural American disinclination to have anything whatever to do with war plays.

For it is against a 1914 war-time background that the authors of the French original, "La Veille d'Armes," have staged their retelling of the complications that arise when a grave and elderly fellow marries a pretty and flighty young woman—a familiar spring of dramatic material, whence has gushed a stream into which so many French authors have variously waded, wallowed and, occasionally, sunk. Two acts pass in the harbor of Toulon aboard the warship Alma, although the likes of the conduct assigned to most of the characters was never seen on sea or land and the plot is one of those which are prevented from coming to a full stop only through the extreme feeble-mindedness of the heroine.

It should not be gathered from this much that "In the Night Watch" is [illegible] one of these good, old rags-are-[illegible] raiment melodramas of an earlier generation. Echoes of that style it does contain, to be sure. As when the [illegible] Jeanne Eagels, writhing in her lover's arms, is obliged to cry out, "Oh, calm these feverish fancies," quite in the Augusta Evans Wilson manner. Or when bluff, old Maclyn Arbuckle, as the bluff old naval commander, must exclaim in stentorian tones at the court-martial: "Nay, gentlemen, never yet did a sailor turn his back on a woman in distress"—at the first utterance of which line W. S. Gilbert is believed to have turned in his grave in his annoyance at not having thought of it for "Ruddigore." But except for these eruptions and similarly hifalutin lines assigned to Robert Warwick as the noble but gray-haired husband, the text follows pretty much the familiar pattern of French liaison drama.

Enough prominent actors have already been mentioned in this review to make vain any further effort to conceal the fact that "In the Night Watch" boasts an all-star cast, which means perhaps that, when it came time to call rehearsals for it, all the well-known players then at liberty were sent for in a hurry. Max Figman, Margaret Dale, Cyril Scott and Edmund Lowe are among those present. Some of them have very little to do. Miss Dale, for instance, an expert actress, is required merely to scream twice and to suggest what Bunker Bean used to call an advanced dresser. At least, she must seem clairvoyants [illegible] down in a [illegible] scene, which, for a provincial French woman disporting herself in the [illegible] of Toulon, makes here rather an exacting rôle. Mr. Figman adds a genial and curiously British note to the proceedings and Mr. Lowe is excellent as the Saloon officer aboard the husband's ship. Miss Eagels, though cast as the decorative defective, gives an uncommonly good performance and plays her scene of panic capitally.

There is some reason to suspect that some tampering has been going on with Michael Morton's original adaptation which was doubtless not sacrosanct, anyway. At least, if memory serves, "In the Night Watch" had a German spy or two in it when the play was done at the Oxford in London shortly after the armistice. From the manner in which the rôle of Lieutenant Brambourg (Cyril Scott's part) is filled with whining, tale-bearing, drunkenness and other forms of blackguardism, the old foxes in the aisle seats on Saturday night divined that he was the German spy when the ink was still wet on the play.

They and the rest of the first 3,000 saw "In the Night Watch" at its worst, for the fact that several of the players were groping anxiously for their lines made the performance languid and spiritless, and, besides, the scenery was recalcitrant. The 3,000 suffered considerably from this, and to pursue the diagnosis further, they also seemed to be suffering from acute bronchitis, catarrhal—all of them.

FIND EUROPE'S SINGERS GONE TO AMERICA

Covent Garden Looks Over Continent in Vain for New Voices for Opera Season.

Copyright, 1921, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—In making its plans for the usual Summer season of grand opera in London, the Royal Opera Syndicate found itself in a difficult position owing to the impossibility of securing the services of many of the stars of the international operatic stage.

The fact is that during and since the war the great singers all departed to North and South America, where they found plenty of engagements at high fees. Europe, especially in the central countries, is too poor to pay them such prices for their services.

Recently the representative of the syndicate made a tour of Europe with the hope of finding some fine new voices for Covent Garden this Summer, but returned having heard hardly any notable artists.

He says:

"Italy, once so full of fine singers, especially tenors, no longer gets first-rate artists in its own opera houses. They have all gone to America, and much the same remark applies to France."

Some of the great Russian artists, such as Chaliapin, are not allowed by the Bolsheviki to leave their country.

PASSION PLAY BEGINS.

2,500 Children at First Performance This Year of "Veronica's Veil."

The first performance this year of the American Passion Play, "Saint Veronica's Veil," was given yesterday afternoon in St. Joseph's Auditorium, Central Avenue and Traphagen Street, West Hoboken. This is the seventh year that the passion play has been given and most of the 250 persons in the presentation have taken roles since the first performance.

More than 2,500 children attended the performance yesterday, which was exclusively for young people. Performances will be held every Sunday afternoon and evening and every Tuesday and Thursday evening during Lent. The last performance will take place on Palm Sunday, March 22.

The Right Rev. J. J. O'Connor, Bishop of the Newark Diocese, is Honorary Chairman of the committee, W. Bourke Cockran is Acting Chairman and Governor Edwards of New Jersey is Assistant Chairman. The assisting committee is made up of sixty well-known persons of various denominations.

$20,000 FOR FAMINE FUND.

Special Performances of Thirteen Plays Given in Aid of China.

Special performances of thirteen current plays were given in Broadway theatres yesterday in aid of the China Famine Fund, one at a matinee and the remaining twelve at night. All persons concerned with the various productions, including the players, the house attachés and the orchestras, gave their service free of all charge, and it was estimated last night that well over $20,000 had been raised. A majority of the performances drew capacity audiences.

The single matinee was a performance of "The Woman of Bronze," given by Margaret Anglin and her company at the Frazee. In the evening the premiere of "The New Morality," with Grace George, took place at the Playhouse, and there were also performances of "The Broken Wing," at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre; "The Champion," at the Longacre; "Wake Up, Jonathan," at the Henry Miller; "Welcome, Stranger," at the Cohan and Harris; "Mary," at the Knickerbocker; "The Meanest Man in the World," at the Hudson; "The Tavern," at the Cohan; "Samson and Delilah," at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre; "Little Old New York," at the Plymouth; "Miss Lulu Bett," at the Belmont, and "The Skin Game," at the Bijou.

PLAY FAVORITE SYMPHONIES

Philharmonic's Matinee of Popular Works Fills Carnegie Hall.

Two symphonies, Beethoven's Eighth and Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique," attracted an audience that filled Carnegie Hall to overflowing at yesterday's Philharmonic matinee, many persons standing throughout the orchestra's performance of the pair. There were also two favorite works of lesser proportions.

Mr. Stransky at start of the afternoon gave the prelude, chorale and fugue of Bach, already heard in several of the season's programs, and after Beethoven's symphony the "Leonore" overture No. 3. The hush over all the house during Tchaikovsky's poignant tone-tragedy, however hackneyed today, must have impressed many besides those elders who recalled the composer himself on this stage nearly thirty years ago at Carnegie Hall's dedication.

Dinner to Charles B. Dillingham.

Charles B. Dillingham was the guest on Saturday night at a dinner at the Hotel Plaza given by the Directors of the holding company of the New York Hippodrome. The dinner was in honor of the twenty-five-hundredth Hippodrome performance since that playhouse came under the direction of Mr. Dillingham. Harry S. Black, Chairman of the governing board, was the host.

Rev. W. E. Bentley to Act Hamlet.

The Rev. Walter E. Bentley, rector of St. Stephen's Church of Port Washington, L. I., will play the title rôle in a production of "Hamlet" to be acted in the High School Auditorium of Port Washington next Thursday and Saturday nights and Saturday afternoon. Dr. Bentley was an actor before becoming a minister.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

"Three Live Ghosts" was played in the chapel of Sing Sing last night by the company which has been presenting the play at the Nora Bayes.

James K. Hackett will produce John Drinkwater's "Mary, Queen of Scots," in London in the Fall. William Harris will present the piece in New York in the near future.

There will be an extra matinee of "Spanish Love" at the Maxine Elliott next Thursday.

Margaret Anglin will speak at the Anderson Galleries this afternoon at the initial meeting of "The Union of East and West." Rabindranath Tagore will read from his works.

The dramatization of "Miss Lulu Bett" is soon to be published in book form. It will include both the original third act and the subsequent version.

MUSIC

By Richard Aldrich.

The New York Symphony Orchestra.

At the concert of the New York Symphony Society yesterday afternoon in Aeolian Hall, Mr. Damrosch repeated the "London" Symphony of R. Vaughan Williams, the English composer, that was first played here on his recent visit by Mr. Albert Coates. There was not only the change of condition to be reckoned with, but also the fact that it was played in Aeolian Hall instead of Carnegie Hall.

Under these circumstances, the symphony made again a deep impression; to those who heard it a second time it may have seemed even a more profoundly felt and original expression than it did before. The elaborate program analysis of it made by Mr. Coates for the first performance was reprinted in The Bulletin yesterday; but it seemed again not dependent on this visualization for its value as music.

There was also on the program Mozart's concerto for two pianos with orchestra, played by that remarkable pair, Messrs. Maier and Pattison, and recently heard from two other pianists in Carnegie Hall at a concert of the National Symphony Orchestra. The performance was a beautiful one, not only in its precision of ensemble but in its seizure of the spirit. The program was closed with Brahms's "Academic Festival Overture," which Mr. Damrosch played at his Brahms concert in the historical cycle last week.

For some reason not stated the conductor's desk was wreathed with green, and as Mr. Damrosch entered he was greeted with applause by his men, who rose, and a bunch of flowers was given him. The audience, though taken unawares, also rose. Those who went home and consulted "Who's Who" or other authoritative manuals found that Mr. Damrosch was born on Jan. 30, 1862.

MASSENET'S "MANON" FEB. 9

Mme. Farrar in Leading Rôle—Other Next Week's Operas.

The Metropolitan will add Massenet's "Manon" to its more than thirty current operas on Wednesday evening of next week, Feb. 9, with Mme. Farrar, Messrs. Hackett, Chalmers and Rothier, under the direction of Albert Wolff. "La Bohéme" will be repeated at an extra Thursday matinee by Bori, Crimi, Scotti and others, while "The Barber of Seville" will be sung for the first time on Saturday, Feb. 12, the night of Lincoln's Birthday, at a popular price performance with Cora Chase, Hackett, De Luca and Mardones.

For the thirteenth week, other operas are "Eugene Onyegin" next Monday, with Muzio, Martinelli, De Luca and Didur; Thursday evening, "Mefistofele," Alda, Easton, Gigli, Mardones; Friday, "Louise," Farrar, Berat, Harrold and Whitehill, and Saturday matinee, "Pagliacci" and "Coq d'Or," the one with Bori in a favorite rôle as Nedda, and the other with Evelyn Scotney new as the Queen. There will be a Tuesday performance in Brooklyn of "Cavalleria" and "Coq d'Or."

A gala benefit for Italy's earthquake sufferers takes the place of the usual opera-concert next Sunday. Among those appearing under the auspices of the Progresso Italiano-Americano newspaper will be Muzio, Ponselle, Martinelli, Crimi, De Luca, Danise, Didur and Mardones.

At last night's crowded concert, Duci de Kerekjarto, the Hungarian violinist, was heartily applauded in Mendelssohn's concerto. Mabel Garrison was ill, and in her place Miss Scotney sang Verdi's "Caro Nome." Others heard were Ponselle, Harrold and Danise.

MUSIC NOTES.

Giorgio Polacco, formerly conductor at the Metropolitan, arrived from France yesterday by the Aquitania to join the Chicago Opera forces at the Manhattan, where he will direct this week's performances of "Manon" and "Thais."

Erika Morini, a recent debutante in Carnegie Hall with the Metropolitan Orchestra, is to be heard in her first violin recital here on Friday, Feb. 11, in Aeolian Hall.

The Intercollegiate Glee Club contest, to be held in the new Town Hall on Feb. 26, will bring choruses of students from Amherst, Columbia, Dartmouth, Harvard, New York University, Pennsylvania State, Princeton and the University of Pennsylvania.

A benefit for crippled children at the Waldorf-Astoria on Wednesday of this week engages Elise Bonwit, Eunice Keeler, Virginia Gitchell, Beatrice Weinberger, Maude Raymond, Jeannette Neuhaus, Polly Gill, Leo Bernstein and several more.

Last night was "Italian night" in the free concerts at Cooper Union, of which fifteen are planned, and all those held thus far have packed the great hall. Among the artists were Mario Leurenti of the Metropolitan, Carmela Ippolito, Arturo Bonucci, Roberto Rotondo and Luigi Paparello.

More Eulogizing for Lulu!
DR. FRANK CRANE—"Miss Lulu Bett" is simply an amazing performance. It is the average American home with one wall removed. It is realism in the only way that realism becomes art—that is to say, it is realism treated with genius; especially the character of Grandma Bett is a distinct and original creation. It is as good as anything that Dickens ever did. The whole play is not only delightful—it is perfect art.
MRS. SAMUEL UNTERMYER—The play delighted me and I want to see it again. I am advising all my friends not to miss it.
LUDWIG LEWISOHN—(In the Nation)—At the end of the first performance of "Miss Lulu Bett" it was difficult not to be persuaded that here was the most genuine achievement of the American Stage since Eugene O'Neil's "Beyond the Horizon."
ELIZABETH BEATTY—(Editor of McCall's Magazine)—The entire production is a rare treat. I think the play seems even more perfect than the book and I didn't suppose that such a thing could be a possibility. Every one who cares about the stage and about good work ought to see it.
THE BELMONT is a small theatre and "MISS LULU BETT" is a big hit. The Phone number isn't in the book—it's BRYANT 48. Seats for the next eight weeks are now on sale. They won't be long.

—Greatest of All Songs—
"The most inspired and sublime songs ever written are in the Schubert cycle called 'The Winter Journey.' This cycle will be sung (in English) at Aeolian Hall next Thursday evening by the Australian baritone Nelson Illingworth, who looks like Lincoln and who made such a sensation at his first recital here. Loewe's dramatic 'Archibald Douglas' will also be sung. For music students this is a glorious chance to learn the supreme art of poetic interpretation."—Henry T. Finck, Eve. Post.

THE SCREEN

"Godless Men," adapted from Ben Ames Williams's story, "Black Pawl," is not altogether typical movie despite the typicalness of its commercial title, is at the Capitol this week. It was directed by Reginald Barker.

Here is a photoplay that makes its way against obstacles that have blocked and buried less vigorous pictures. In the first place, it has not the advantage of genuinely cinematographic treatment. In many scenes, it almost talks its spectators to death, or to sleep, at any rate, and in critical moments it often has to depend upon words, instead of moving pictures, and, of course, finds them wanting. They are not suitable words, as a rule, and even if they were, they could not be effective on the screen. Also, Mr. Barker, apparently, was afraid that the rough sea dogs of his plot, with their mid-Pacific manners, might offend the midway Pacific people of quiet towns and villages, and so dragged in and piled on much more moralizing and preaching than his story required for its dramatic purpose. And the picture is too long. Its needless words and non-essential details add to it many feet of film that are nothing more than feet of film.

Yet, with all this, "Godless Men" has its triumphant moments, and, at the end, reaches a climax of true dignity and impressiveness. It is saved by fine photography if not cinematography, faithfulness of setting, sincerity of acting and a story too strong for the molds and trimmers of the motion-picture mill.

The action takes place on board a small trading schooner in the South Pacific Ocean, and the scenes on the deck of the boat, and in its cabins, are strikingly well made. Here is where literalness counts. By taking an actual schooner and men who seem to be really of the sea, Mr. Barker has brought the smell of salt and the sense of space to the screen, with the aid of remarkably good photography. And for his principal players, he has chosen well, with only one exception.

Russell Simpson, as sincere an actor as there is on the screen, has the chief rôle, that of an embittered old captain who has raised his son to reflect the worst side of himself. The son is accurately presented by James Mason, and the reliable Alex B. Francis, as a missionary traveling home on Black Pawl's schooner, brings the necessary mellowing influence into the plot. Helene Chadwick, as the only woman aboard, about whom, as may be imagined, the plot thickens and boils, does her part as well as she can, but she is not of the fibre to be convincing as a child of the water-front raised among the savage whites and blacks of the South Seas. John Bowers, as the young hero who takes her out of the story to the usual happy marriage, is pleasing, as he is meant to be. The big dominating figure of the story is Black Pawl. His life, his fights, his failures, and his final triumph are its substance, and, in the person of Russell Simpson, this figure does not fall short of the measure made for it.

"Babyhood," a reel of babies of various nationalities, moods, sizes and shapes, photographed for the Kineto Company, is also on the Capitol program. Is there anyone to whom it is not a reel of joy?

Accidents of business association and the control of theatres have kept many first-grade screen actors out of the principal Broadway houses, and one of the most conspicuous victims of this lack of co-ordination between the factors of picture making and picture exhibition has been the Japanese player, Sessue Hayakawa. Not since early in 1918 if ever, has he held the screen of any of the week-run Broadway theatres, although he has, and deserves, a large following throughout the country. It is, therefore, a pleasure to record that he has at last found a place at the Strand, and one must hope that he will come to these parts again and often.

The recording would be more pleasurable, however, if his coming was with the auspices of a better screen work than "The First Born," the photoplay in which the Strand is offering him this week. He has been seen in pictures far superior to it. In February, 1919, for example, there was "Bonds of Honor," in which an aspect of Japanese and American life in Tokio was convincingly presented, and in September of the same year he appeared in "The Dragon Painter," a screen version of an interesting Japanese legend. His present work, however, has no distinctive character. It is merely a rather unpleasant and not exceptionally well-made melodrama, in which the hero, heroine and assortment of villains happen to be Chinese for the moment. And some of them are so obviously Americans dressed up like Chinese that even the effect of orientalism is lost. Hayakawa is a good pantomimist, and shows it in a number of scenes, and some of the others in the cast, specially Helen Jerome Eddy, Goro Kino and Wilson Hummel, make commendable efforts, but the obtruding artificialities of the plot, its stereotyped arrangement, and its unglossed improbabilities are against them.

The story, in which a woman is sold into slavery, a little child is killed, and two murders of revenge are committed, accomplishes no purpose and is just unpleasant. From which the question arises: Does Sessue Hayakawa have to do this sort of stuff to get on Broadway? If so, let him not waste his time on Broadway.

The comedy at the Strand this week is "Bride and Gloom," with Monte Banks.

"The Kentuckians," directed by Charles Maigne, with Monte Blue in the leading rôle, and the third instalment of the Vandenbergh African pictures are at the Rialto this week. Cecil B. DeMille's "Forbidden Fruit" is remaining for a second week at the Rivoli.

RED CROSS GAVE $1,280,000.

1920 Expenditures in This Country Relieved 57 "Major Disasters."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—An official report made public today by the National Headquarters of the American Red Cross lists the number of "major disasters" in the United States in 1920 as 57, and shows the loss of 425 lives, injury to 12,700 people and property loss estimated at $11,250,000. The relief extended by the organization amounted to $780,000, not including the special contribution of $500,000 expended for relief of victims of the Corpus Christi (Texas) flood.

A detailed analysis of the fifty-seven major disasters reveals an unusual number of tornadoes which occurred during March, April and May, effecting losses in nearly 100 communities. Twenty-two fires, three explosions, six floods, eleven tornadoes and cyclones, two storms and cloudbursts, five shipwrecks, two typhoid epidemics, three wrecks and accidents, one general relief problem, one grasshopper plague in North Dakota and the continuation of relief for drought victims in Montana and North Dakota are named as the principal causes of distress in the United States for the year 1920.

DEBS CASE BEFORE WILSON.

Referred to Him With Recommendations, Attorney General Says.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The disposition of the case of Eugene V. Debs, now serving sentence in the Atlanta Penitentiary for violation of the espionage laws, now rests with President Wilson, according to Department of Justice officials. The Attorney General, after careful consideration of the matter, it is said, tonight, has prepared his recommendations for the President's attention. Their nature has not been indicated.

The outcome of the Debs case, Attorney General Palmer said tonight, like all recommendations for pardons passing from the Department to the White House, was an entirely confidential matter, not subject to discussion by the department.

FOREIGN MATERIAL FOR AMERICAN HOMES

Belgian Glass and Steel Offered New York to Force Prices Down.

GERMAN CEMENT, TOO

Domestic Building Materials Cut—Cement to Drop 30 to 40 Cents Any Day.

From sources quite mysterious a flow of foreign-made building materials has begun toward various ports in the United States which may have some influence upon the immediate building construction future.

Persons representing themselves to have European brick manufacturing connections have been in this market offering foreign-made brick in competition with American-made products at a delivered (dock) price below that of domestic building brick at wholesale. Belgian steel and glass have been offered here at prices which have been considerably below the levels governing domestic products of this sort. But the latest and most aggressive foreign building material sales drive is that of German cement. Norwegian lumber has been offered in competition with Douglas fir from the Pacific Coast.

Owing to the high rate of exchange between this and foreign countries, shipping interests have been facing the problem of bringing their ships back to this country with something in their bottoms besides sand and gravel, which had no market as a sales commodity in this vicinity.

For almost a year representatives of building material manufacturing interests in Europe have been coming to this country to see what this market offered in the way of sales opportunity. They came when building material prices here were at peak, as reported in this column at the time.

They were assured that they had a chance to gain a great foothold upon the American construction market, since American-made materials were higher than the price they said they could send them here for. Some consignments were made when it was learned that building financing would not proceed as long as American producers quoted the prices they did.

Europe, however, was having labor troubles of her own at about that time and domestic housing conditions and under-production there took heavier toll of home building requirements than the sales representatives sent here had counted on. It has only been recently, therefore, that this building material in ballast has been coming in in any volume, only to meet a wholly changed condition of American building material production and demand.

Prices have been cut between 35 and 40 per cent. in the basic market in the aggregate since last Summer, and as the cost of fuel and cooperage, cotton and other items entering into manufacturing costs here declined, price reductions are still being made to induce building work to start.

But in the falling market, building material purchasing and construction work stopped and during this recess this foreign material suddenly appears upon the market, according to the current Dow Service Daily Building Reports.

The serious side of this phase of the already entangled building material and construction market is that it is likely to be seized upon by some prospective building investors as a pretext for keeping out of the immediate building market, with the thought in mind of a possible price war between importers and domestic manufacturers.

If American building material mills were overproduced and were carrying stocks for which there was no market, as are mercantile material manufacturers, there might be a basis for this hope. American building material plants are not overstocked.

If the exchange rate could be expected to remain stationary a sufficient length of time to benefit any considerable number of American home builders, they might gain some hope from the promises of sales ambassadors sent here to sell, for the erection of American homes, building material manufactured in a country against which the prospective home owners sent their sons in battle and with which America is still technically at war.

This may account for the fact that contractors have shown reluctance about accepting this material as a club to batter down domestic building material prices. The price situation has changed so greatly since the first overtures for foreign building materials were made last Autumn that the era of a price war from that cause is now quite remote, except, possibly, in the glass market.

Linseed oil is still headed downward, plaster is off 12½ cents in manufacturing cost and 37½ cents in cooperage cost, to the public benefit this week, and before another week elapses it is likely that another price cut will be announced, running from 30 to 40 cents a barrel in delivered cement.

Killed by Fall Down Subway Stairs.

An unidentified man fell down the subway stairs at 110th Street and Lenox Avenue early yesterday morning and was dead when Dr. Telson of Harlem Hospital arrived. The man was about 65 years old, five feet ten inches in height and had white hair. Three of the fingers and one-half of the index finger on the left hand were missing. He wore a dark suit and gray overcoat.

23 YEARS FOR 7-YEAR TERM.

Sing Sing Recognizes "Robinson" as "Riley" Who Forfeits Pardon.

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, N. Y., Jan. 30.—A sentence of seven years will mean twenty-three for Thomas Robinson, a new name but familiar face to Sing Sing, who reached the prison today from Brooklyn. Justice James Cropsey sentenced Robinson to seven years for extortion in Kings County. When he walked into the main entrance of the prison hand-cuffed to another offender, a guard smiled and remarked: "Well, you've come back to see us again." Robinson looked away.

The guard recognized Robinson as Terry Riley, an old offender, released last Summer on a conditional pardon granted by the Governor, which cut sixteen years from his twenty-year sentence for burglary in New York City. It stipulated that, if Riley got into trouble again during those sixteen years, he would have to serve out his sentence.

Riley went to the prison clerk's office and, when asked his name, replied: "Thomas Robinson," and as his commitment papers stated this was his name, he was so recorded and will be so addressed. However, "Robinson" will first serve sixteen years which he owes as Riley before he starts to serve the sentence he received as Robinson.

MIX TWO MRS. CHAPMANS.

Mrs. William Rogers Chapman Not Seeking to Head Club Federation.

Mrs. William Rogers Chapman, President of the Rubenstein Club, whom many of her friends have thought was running for President of the City Federation of Women's Clubs instead of Mrs. Richard M. Chapman of Brooklyn, was much distressed yesterday when she learned that Miss Mary Wood, the New York Federation candidate for President, had been accused of playing politics in trying to put the matter straight.

Miss Wood, trying to clear matters at the request of Mrs. William Rogers Chapman, a personal friend, had sent out the notice with some literature of her own, and Brooklyn supporters of Mrs. Richard M. Chapman said she was trying to make it appear that their candidate was out of the running.

"I think it was very unfair to Miss Wood," said Mrs. William Rogers Chapman yesterday, "to accuse her of anything but the best of intentions. Since the nomination of Mrs. Richard M. Chapman of Brooklyn I have constantly received letters from my friends saying they had heard that I was running for the presidency of the federation, and of course they would support me. My having a middle initial 'R' and the other Mrs. Chapman's name sometimes being given just as Mrs. R. Chapman has led to confusion."

DOUBLE DUTY IRKED SAILORS

Cannonier's Crew Explain Their Action on Her Long Voyage.

Sailors of the Belgian freighter Cannonier visited THE NEW YORK TIMES office last night to deny that they refused to do duty on the recent voyage from Bordeaux which lasted two months. They said that after the stokers were disabled by burns in Bermuda they were made to do double duty in the fireroom and at the wheel, and that they refused to do both unless Captain Paul Nicholas permitted them to steer from the wheelhouse instead of the exposed upper bridge, which he would not do.

Robert Bronchart, the wireless operator, also said that he did not send out a wireless call for help, but merely asked for tugs at the direction of the Captain. The Cannonier was within fifty miles of Fire Island, when because of insufficient steam, due to the small boiler room force, she drifted 150 miles to the south.

Long Island Fishermen Catch Mine.

Fishermen at Montauk Point, at the extreme end of Long Island, picked up a mine yesterday near the United States Naval Radio Station there. News of the discovery was sent by radio to naval officials in New York, informing them that the mine had been pulled ashore.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The storm that was central Saturday night over Missouri moved eastward, without material change in intensity, and Sunday night its centre was over West Virginia. Since Saturday night it has been attended by snows in the upper Mississippi Valley and the region of the Great Lakes, rains changing to snows in New England and New York, and rains in the Ohio Valley, Tennessee and the Middle Atlantic and the interior of the South Atlantic and East Gulf States. Rains are again reported from the Pacific States and snows from the West plateau regions.

In the New England States there will be snow and colder weather Monday and fair weather Tuesday, with strong northeast winds and gales. In the Middle Atlantic States there will be rain turning to snow, with considerably lower temperature Monday and probably fair weather Tuesday, with strong north winds.

Northeast Storm Warning, 10 P. M.—Atlantic Coast, Sandy Hook to Eastport, Me., storm central over West Virginia moving eastward. Wind will become northeast and east, increasing to gale force by morning.

FORECAST TODAY AND TUESDAY.

BANKRUPTCY NOTICES.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, Southern District of New York.—In the Matter of ISRAEL FEIT, Bankrupt.

Upon reading and filing the annexed petition of Joseph Krinsky, verified the 21st day of January, 1921, upon the annexed offer of Max Bierman, dated the 14th day of January, 1921, upon all the papers and proceedings had herein, and on motion of Archibald Palmer, attorney for the said Receiver, it is ORDERED that the creditors of the above named bankrupt show cause before me or one of the other Judges of this Court to be held in the United States Court House, at the Post Office Bldg., in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 31st day of January, 1921, at 10:30 A. M., or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard,

WHY AN order should not be made herein authorizing and permitting the sale of all the assets, consisting of piece goods and fixtures located at 616 E. 5th St., in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, now in the possession of the Receiver herein, to Max Bierman for the sum of $1,500.00; and it is FURTHER ORDERED that Samual Spiro, Max L. Rosenstein and John L. Lyttle be, and they hereby are, appointed to estimate and appraise the property of the above named bankrupt, and that they file an appraisal with the clerk of this court.

SUFFICIENT REASON appearing therefor, let service of a copy of this order to show cause by mailing the same with a copy of the offer to the creditors of the above named bankrupt appearing on the books of account of the said bankrupt or known to Joseph Krinsky, Esq., the Receiver herein, on or before the 22d day of January, 1921, be deemed good and sufficient service; and it is further ORDERED that the said proposed sale be advertised in The New York Times and Daily News Record twice before said offer of sale is heard.

Dated, N. Y., January 21st, 1921.
AUGUSTUS N. HAND, U. S. D. J.

ROTARY SHIRTS
Spring Line Opened

THIS is the logical and psychological moment to order your Spring shirts. Waiting is over. The keenest and most foresighted buyers now are providing for their full, legitimate Spring needs. And we earnestly advocate—as a representative shirt institution—that all buyers follow this sensible example . . .

ROTARY SHIRTS

See first-hand what we have succeeded in accomplishing for the Spring season. You will have a better conception of the shirt market and shirt values after you have seen the line.

Never a line more complete or more superbly tailored. Never a line more closely priced. ROTARY SHIRTS for Spring are designed, above everything else, to observe the letter and spirit of the country-wide demand for solid rock bottom prices. We recognize that in order to move merchandise into channels of consumption, the responsibility rests upon the shirt manufacturer to render the utmost possible value and the lowest possible prices—and that spirit is conscientiously reflected in the new Spring line of ROTARY SHIRTS.

An equal duty rests upon the buyer and manufacturer—to see that all the properly established standards of quality and workmanship are maintained. Whatever the conditions are, ROTARY SHIRTS keep faith with the principle of undeviating quality.

Buy your legitimate Spring requirements now. Buy no more—buy no less.

HUSBAND'S MODEL ENDS LIFE BY GAS

Wife of Illustrator Said to Have Become Jealous of His Devotion to His Art.

HAD BEEN PARTED 6 MONTHS

Suicide the End of Romance That Began When the Two Were Students.

Mrs. Helen McClung, poet, art student and artist's model, and wife of N. Winsburo McClung, an illustrator, killed herself with gas in a rooming house at 84 Sixth Avenue yesterday morning. She left behind her only an empty envelope addressed to the husband, from whom she was separated, and no explanation of her act. The separation had endured six months.

The proprietor of the rooming house at 344 West Nineteenth Street, where the couple lived until shortly before they parted, said Mrs. McClung had posed for her husband, and that they seemed happy together until the 24-year-old wife became jealous of his devotion to his art.

McClung occupies a small studio on the top floor of the Miller Building at 1,931 Broadway. It was there he was notified of his wife's death. Before he left to identify the body at the Morgue he was heard to say that he had expected some such ending of their broken romance. He loved his wife, but had consented to a separation because it seemed best on account of her nervous condition.

Not very much was known about the McClungs at the Nineteenth Street house, where they lived some time, but other roomers there said they understood that the husband might have enjoyed a life of comparative ease had he not chosen to follow a career of difficult and slow progress.

McClung's father, it was said, was a wealthy resident of Salem, N. C., and the proprietor of a newspaper.

The McClungs met, it was learned, while both were studying at the Art Students' League. The girl made some progress at painting, but, when they decided to marry six years ago, she devoted herself to writing poetry. So far as could be learned, none of her poems was published.

After separating from her husband, Mrs. McClung took up designing. Fellow roomers did not know where she was employed.

Margarite De Javenis, proprietor of the rooming house, when notified early yesterday morning that gas was escaping from under Mrs. McClung's door, forced the door. Rags had been stuffed under the door and in the crevices about the windows. A gas tube connected with a stove was stuck under the woman's pillow.

Patrolman Shea came from the Mercer Street Station and a few minutes later Dr. Woolsey brought a pulmotor from St. Vincent's Hospital. He found Mrs. McClung dead.

MANY CONGRATULATE DR. MANNING AT CHURCH

Bishop-Elect Pays Tribute to Parish, and Holds an Informal Reception.

The Rev. William T. Manning, Bishop-elect of the Episcopal Diocese of New York, received many congratulations from members of his congregation after the service at Trinity Church yesterday morning. Dr. Manning will continue as rector of Trinity, where he has been for the last twelve years, until he is consecrated as bishop, which, it is expected, will be soon after Easter. Dr. Manning did not preach, but spoke briefly before the sermon, the pulpit being occupied by the Rev. Cyril Bickersteth of the Community of the Resurrection, who are monks in England.

"No rector, I think, ever had a people more patient with his faults and shortcomings, more wholly generous and loyal in their support than it has been my lot to have had in this historic parish," he said. "The thought of that will be of untold help to me in the days to come. But the tie between us will be as sacred in the future as in the past."

At the end of the service Dr. Manning took his place at the entrance as has been his custom. The members of the congregation crowded round him and an informal reception was soon in progress, with Mrs. Manning and their two daughters, Miss Elizabeth Manning and Miss Frances Manning, assisting the Bishop-elect.

NO SCRAPPING OF NAVY, DANIELS TELLS MIDDIES

Says Need for Big Sea Force Is Greater Than Ever—Soon to Resume Newspaper Work.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 30.—There will be no scrapping of the navy, at least in the near future, Secretary of the Navy Daniels told the regiment of Midshipmen in an address tonight before the Young Men's Christian Association at the Naval Academy.

Secretary Daniels urged the future officers not to be alarmed at tales that battleships would soon be supplanted by air fighting craft.

"There is greater need now than ever before for a big navy and a strong navy, both on, over and under the sea," Mr. Daniels said. "The navy is to the nation what the Gulf Stream is to the ocean. They are separate and distinct bodies, but each is a part of the great whole."

The Secretary grew reminiscent of the eight years he has served as head of the navy.

"I have made a number of trips here," he said, "but this will be my last. I will be glad to retire from public life, get back to the editorial chair and brush up in newspaper writing, and there is no doubt that I will have much to write about."

TWO BOYS WE KNOW

WE know two boys, brothers, ages a few years apart. Raised in comfortable circumstances. Good schools, well housed and well fed. Both of them fine physical specimens. Both unusually alike even for brothers. Except for one thing—teeth. The older boy has needed the constant attention of his dentist. His teeth are soft. The younger fellow has fine, hard, white teeth that simply radiate vitality. This boy has always been a milk drinker. The older brother never got the habit.

No food or foods could ever supersede the need for competent dental attention, but the greatest help your dentist could have in keeping your children's teeth as you would have them is a quart a day of good Sheffield Milk.

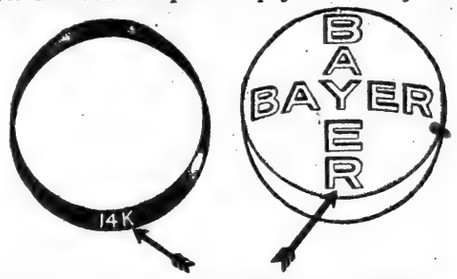
Genuine Aspirin

Bayer introduced Aspirin to physicians 18 years ago



The "Bayer Cross" on Aspirin tablets has the same meaning as 14 Karat on gold. Both mean Genuine! "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" should be taken according to the directions in each "Bayer" package. Be sure the "Bayer Cross" is on package and on tablets. Then you are getting the genuine Aspirin prescribed by physicians for over eighteen years.

THE NEW LIGHT-SIX

ORIGINAL COST

In making your original investment in this car, you receive the benefit of the manufacturing savings estimated at 20% to 25%, made possible by complete manufacture in the new modern $20,000,000 Studebaker plants at South Bend, Indiana, because—

(a) the price includes but one manufacturing profit on castings, forgings, stampings, motor, axles, transmission, frame, body, top, etc.
(b) the amount of overhead expenses included in the price is very small.
(c) excess weight is eliminated without sacrifice of durability or quality. The shipping weight of the car, 2500 pounds, is distributed equally over the four wheels.

OPERATING SAVINGS

In operating this car, you receive the benefit of the economic advantages arising from its superb design, skillful manufacture, excess safety factors, and high quality, because—

(a) it will go from 12 to 15 thousand miles on the standard 32 x 4 cord tires.
(b) it will go from 18 to 22 miles on a gallon of gasoline.
(c) it will render from 8 to 10 years of satisfactory service.

besides, that intimacy with the banker-

which is so valuable to every manufacturer, is afforded only by communities such as this industrial center, within the metropolitan zone, but just outside of the "big business" circle. Here are the heads of nine banks with over One Hundred Millions of Dollars at their command, catering to local manufacturers whose every need they know intimately, ready to provide accommodation not only for the handling of current accounts, but for plant construction and the general enlargement of any manufacturing industry which tends to add to the prosperity of the community. This does not preclude the use of financial connections already established in the "big city".

Other features of interest to every manufacturer are:

LOCATION—17 miles from Times Square; on three trunk line railroads, with trolley and trucking highways radiating in every direction.

TRANSPORTATION—Three trunk line railroads provide hundreds of passenger and freight trains daily; public and private switch-track facilities available; one hour trucking over brand new highway to New York.

HOUSING—All advantages of Manhattan Island, with the added facilities of an attractive suburban community, are made possible by the "every minute" train commutation and trolley service.

POWER—Many self-contained power units are incorporated within the plants available for immediate occupancy. In addition, however, there is the usual public utility electric service and a chartered hydro-electric power plant.

FACTORY BUILDINGS—Several modern mills may be leased or purchased on satisfactory terms, but for those desiring special types of construction, new buildings will be erected.

Employing the entire family is like using the by-product of a basic material in manufacture. Employment has already been provided for thousands of women, and the by-products of this labor—males—are available in large numbers on good terms, and they are both skilled and unskilled, in all branches of trade, particularly in the metal working lines.

THE bankers, merchants, manufacturers and workers of a large industrial city within the metropolitan district have commissioned us to act for them in presenting to the public what may well be considered one of the largest industrial movements in this country.

Details, including literature, photographs, special plant studies and general information concerning available manufacturing space, will be furnished upon application to

Right now—you need an L. B. Stock record

You need it to prevent being caught napping by sudden fluctuations in commodity markets. Prices are changing over-night. Supply and demand are uncertain.

Success in 1921 depends largely on when you buy your stock—how much you buy—and how much you pay for it. An L. B. Stock record gives you an instant, day-by-day inventory of your stock.

Take the experience of the United Shoe Machinery Corporation:—

Under the old system, it took four to five days to get exact information on purchases, deliveries, stock on hand. Today, with an L. B. Stock record, it is a matter of minutes.

It will pay you to investigate the L. B. Stock record. We say "pay you" because it will save you ten, twenty, one hundred times what it costs you. It is the most important purchase any executive can make today to safeguard his business.

A post card or a telephone call brings an L. B. representative to your office.

FIVE-YEAR SENTENCE FOR FATHER DOMINIC

Two Years Remitted in Judgment on Chaplain of Late Lord Mayor MacSwiney.

PEARSE HOUSE WRECKED

Building Owned by Mother of Late "Provisional President" Raided After Irish Ambush.

VIOLENCE MARKS WEEK-END

Four Persons Killed, Fifty Arrested—Clashes Between Troops and Civilians in Various Places.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DUBLIN, Jan. 30.—Father Dominic, chaplain to the late Lord Mayor MacSwiney of Cork, has been sentenced to five years' penal servitude with two years remitted. He was tried for writing a letter likely to cause disaffection.

Another turbulent week-end in Ireland brought death and injury in its train. Dublin and Cork have both been the scenes of sharp fighting between the military and civilians with serious casualties to each. At least four men have been mysteriously shot dead and some fifty arrests have been made.

In Dublin the fighting was the result of an ambush near Terenure, a suburb of the city, last night, and it is officially reported that one officer and eight of other ranks were wounded. It is added that the party returned the fire and reached the barracks complete with their arms.

I learn that the officer and twelve soldiers of the Royal Berkshire regiment were traveling in motor lorry toward the city shortly before 9 o'clock. As they passed a piece of waste ground opposite Whitton Road, a number of shots were fired and bombs were thrown at the lorry. The officer was wounded in the face by a splinter and the bomb explosions seem to have been the cause of all the injuries sustained.

Parties of police went from the Terenure Police Station to the spot, but in the darkness were unable to carry their investigations far. It is believed, however, some of the attackers were also wounded.

Pearse House Wrecked.

BELFAST, Jan. 30.—Cullenswood House, in Ranelagh, a Dublin suburb, was wrecked on Saturday night by the military. The house was owned by the aged mother of Patrick H. Pearse, once "Provisional President" of Ireland, who was executed after the 1916 rebellion. Previously it was used by St. Enda's College.

Lately the building had been rented out as flats, and a portion of it was occupied by a Sinn Fein club. It was the only source of income for Mrs. Pearse. One of the flats had been occupied by a Mrs. Mulcahy, but she and all the other occupants except Mrs. Pearse had left the building in December, owing to repeated raids, during one of which a bullet fired through the front door narrowly missed Mrs. Mulcahy's baby.

The military wrecked the house with pickaxes and crowbars. It is said they were seeking Richard Mulcahy, a member of the Dail Eireann and the reputed Chief of Staff of the Republican Army. The interior of the building was entirely demolished. All the windows were smashed, except in the room occupied by Mrs. Pearse. The floors and the interior walls were ripped up, part of the roof was gone and some of the furniture had been thrown out of the windows. According to Mrs. Pearse, the "Black and Tans" who wrecked the house went away grumbling because they had found nothing and declared that they were always being sent on false trails.

Local opinion today seemed to be that the wrecking of the house was done in reprisal for the ambuscade at Terenure. Residents of the building were engaged today in removing the furniture that remained in the rooms.

One of the members of the ambushing party which was surprised by military forces on Friday at Coachford, County Cork, died in a hospital here today of wounds received in the engagement.

It appears the party had trenched the road running from Cork to Macroom. The members of the party who escaped carried off and concealed their slightly wounded comrades, but were obliged to abandon the five seriously wounded.

Constable Clarke, who was wounded recently at Stranooden, County Monaghan, when his comrades were killed, also died in a hospital today.

A police patrol was fired on near Virginia, County Cavan, last night. The police returned the fire, and three of the attacking party were seen to fall. There were no police casualties.

DUBLIN, Jan. 30.—A dairyman, named Doody, was shot dead on Saturday night in Rathmines, a suburb of Dublin, when he alighted from his pony cart at the behest of two men who stepped suddenly from a side path of Leinster Road, in the residential quarter.

The authorities in Dublin Castle describe the shooting as a complete mystery.

Frank Meara, a laborer, who had been arrested at Killfaule, Tipperary, was shot dead today when he tried to escape.

LIMERICK, Jan. 30.—Thomas Blake, President of the Limerick Branch of the Chemists' Association, was found dead today near his home. He had been shot.

Father Dominic's Trial.

Father Dominic was arrested in December, when two monasteries were raided by the military and police in Dublin. The charges against him were based on certain passages in a notebook and a letter, alleged to have been written by him or to have been in his possession. He maintained that the passages in the notebook were dictated to him by Lord Mayor MacSwiney in Brixton prison, in the presence of the prison authorities, for transmission to MacSwiney's friends, and that the letter was a private communication to a friend in England.

The letter made reference to "Black and Tan" reprisals and the Croke Park shooting, which, it was declared, was ordered by General Macready, military commander of Ireland, and General Tudor, commander of the "Black and Tans," or auxiliary forces. It was also declared that it had been decided to assassinate Lord Mayor O'Neill of Dublin.

A memorandum alleged to have been found in Father Dominic's room at the Capuchin Friary in Dublin was headed "Ireland, an Invaded Nation," and began: "All the inhabitants of every nation unjustly invaded are bound to resist the invader. And the nation is considered to be at war with the invader."

Throughout the long days of Lord Mayor MacSwiney's hunger strike Father Dominic was ever at his side. Through him much information regarding the fasting Mayor was given to the world. He was present at the bedside when MacSwiney died.

HUNTING PARTIES FORBIDDEN.

General Strickland Says They May Lead to Breaches of the Peace.

CORK, Jan. 30.—Major Gen. Sir Edward Strickland, in command of the troops, in a proclamation today forbids hunting, point-to-point races and coursing meetings in certain areas of the Counties Cork, Tipperary and Limerick.

The commander gives as his reason that it is possible these local hunt meetings will be likely to lead to breaches of the peace and be prejudicial to the restoration of order.

Lenin Says Dictatorship May Last 40 Years More

COPENHAGEN, Jan. 30.—To the Spanish Social Democrats visiting Russia Lenin said:

"We never spoke about liberty. We practice the proletariat's dictatorship in the name of the minority because the peasant class has not yet become proletariat and are not with us. It will continue until they subject themselves.

"The difficulty is that we have no industrial goods with which to pay the peasants for the goods we request from them, so must continue to print paper money.

"Presumably, the dictatorship will last about forty years."

ASSAILS O'CALLAGHAN ORDER.

Senator Reed Says Deportation Will Bring "Curses and Hatred."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The State Department, in recommending the deportation of Donal J. O'Callaghan, Lord Mayor of Cork, "ordered him back to prison or death," Senator Reed of Missouri declared in an address here today in which he asserted America hitherto always had welcomed "political refugees" and "held its guns ready to fire in their defense." The Missouri Senator, speaking at a mass meeting held under the auspices of the American Committee for Relief in Ireland, which jammed a local theatre, added:

"Let any Government do this deed and curses, hatred and contempt will be and ought to be visited on the perpetrator of that act for hundreds of years to come. I speak as a Senator of the United States and part of a responsible Government."

Senator Walsh of Massachusetts, addressing the meeting, asserted that the "saddest" issue of the war was that the people of Ireland had been "misled in the belief that at last the day had come when tyranny would be removed from every part of the world."

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—Resolutions protesting against the deportation of Donal J. O'Callaghan, Lord Mayor of Cork, were adopted tonight at a mass meeting under the auspices of various Irish societies of the city. Several thousand persons attended.

IRISH AID MEETING DRAWS 17,000 PEOPLE

Five Thousand, However, Stand in Rain Outside Sixty-Ninth Regiment Armory.

Twelve thousand people crowded into the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory at Lexington Avenue and Twenty-sixth Street, last night, and 5,000 others stood outside in the rain in the hope of hearing Donal J. O'Callaghan, Lord Mayor of Cork, speak at an entertainment organized by the James Butler Employes' Mutual Benefit Association to raise funds for the American Committee for Relief in Ireland.

An hour before the Lord Mayor began to speak the police had thrown a line around the armory and refused to admit any but holders of reserved seat tickets. The crowd in the armory was so great that only the people standing immediately around the speaker's platform could hear O'Callaghan, but the entire assemblage greeted him with prolonged cheers.

In opening the meeting, Morgan J. O'Brien, Chairman of the American Committee for Relief in Ireland, said that he considered the large audience an indication that the people of America, "regardless of the political or religious aspect of the Irish situation, will not allow the women and children of Ireland to starve." He announced that James Butler, head of the firm of James Butler, Inc., which operates 570 stores, had agreed to add $10,000 to the amount collected through the entertainment.

"The relief of Ireland will be a large undertaking," the Lord Mayor said. "It's well for you to understand that at the outset. So long as Ireland is under the heel of a foreign nation, so long there will be war and need for relief. Our suffering people will need aid until the fight for freedom has been crowned with success."

The Rev. Father Francis E. Duffy, Chaplain of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, said that the people of Ireland and the people of England have no cause for war but that hostilities were being forced by the Government. He said that if freedom were given Ireland "religious minorities would be the favored minorities of the new republic."

John Finnegan, tenor, and the Paulist Choristers sang.

PURSUERS OF BERGDOLL STILL IN EBERBACH JAIL

Detectives Acted on Own Initiative—American Army Officers Without Orders.

COBLENZ, Jan. 30.—Carl Neuf and Frank Zimmer, the alleged American detectives who recently attempted to kidnap Grover C. Bergdoll, American draft evader, and Isaac Stecher, his chauffeur, in Eberbach, Baden, are said to have acted on their own initiative. So far as is known here the American Army of Occupation authorities have received no official instructions regarding the case and the detectives are still in jail in Eberbach.

FRANKFORT, Germany, Jan. 29.—The Frankfort Gazette, commenting on the recent attempt to kidnap Grover Bergdoll and Isaac Stecher in Eberbach, Baden, says today that the "wild west" methods of carrying out the law as practiced by sheriffs in the border districts of Kansas and Colorado, are hardly adaptable to Germany.

The newspaper requests outsiders to refrain from using German territory for such experiments and says it trusts the United States does not interpret the existing state of war between the two countries as "affording a license for invading Germany or permitting its detectives to indulge in promiscuous revolver practice there."

RED ARMY IN PERSIA AGAIN.

Constantinople Hears of Plans for Next Bolshevist Offensive.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 29.—Tartar Bolshevist troops have entered the town of Kasvin, ninety miles northwest of Teheran, and British forces in the latter city are reported to have begun a withdrawal, it is said in dispatches received here today.

Secret instructions regarding the "next Russian Bolshevist offensive" have been given to army leaders by Leon Trotsky, Soviet Minister of War, at a conference just concluded at Moscow.

It is asserted that the Bolsheviki have fifty-two divisions of infantry and twenty divisions of cavalry along the Polish and Rumanian fronts. Reports received here state the Soviet Government has established six army headquarters, which are located at Baku, Kazan, Rostov, Moscow, Perm and Omsk.

KEMAL DEMANDS ALLIES WITHDRAW

Won't Confer in London Till Turkey Is Evacuated and Indemnity Waived.

GREECE COUNTS ON OUR AID

Premier Says He Is Sure Washington Would Protest Against Turkish Rule in Smyrna.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 30.—Turkey's delegation to the London conference at which revision of the Treaty of Sèvres will be discussed will contain a large Nationalist element.

Mustapha Kemal Pasha has notified the Grand Vizier that, as the Angora Government is the only real one in Turkey, it awaits a direct invitation from the Allies to attend the conference. The Angora administration, Mustapha Kemal says, will make its acceptance of the invitation subject to the conditions that foreign troops immediately evacuate all Turkish territory, and that no indemnity payments be required.

Newspapers here friendly to the Allies describe the London conference as Turkey's new chance. Local Greeks received sorrowfully the news that the conference would be held, saying they considered that it would place the Greeks on a level with the Turks, whereas they were in a position to dictate to them when Venizelos participated in the councils of the Allies.

The Greek patriarch presided over a secret meeting of the Synod and of the Committee of National Defense here today, at which it was decided to send delegations to the London conference to protect the interests of Greeks living in territory not yet redeemed from the Turks.

A message was also sent to ex-Premier Venizelos, pleading with him to defend the Treaty of Sèvres and to prevent the loss of Thrace and Smyrna.

Brigadier General Townsend, commander of the British forces here, is believed to have gone to Angora and to be attempting to make arrangements with the Turkish Nationalists relative to the London conference.

PARIS, Jan. 30.—Mustapha Kemal Pasha has announced that he will participate willingly in the conference to be held with the heads of allied nations late in February, says a Constantinople dispatch today. He demands, however, that Anatolia and Cilicia be evacuated by allied troops before the conference begins.

Stands on Mandate for Smyrna.

ATHENS, Jan. 29 (Associated Press).—Premier Rhallis intimated that Greece would resist any attempt to revise the Turkish treaty at the London conference set for Feb. 21. He asserted that Greece was occupying Smyrna by virtue of a mandate from the Allies, and expressed the conviction that the United States would say the final word as to alterations in the terms of the treaty.

The Premier declared that he had received information that recognition by the United States Government of Constantine as the Greek Sovereign was imminent and expressed hope that the undrawn balance of credits advanced by America to Greece would be paid. [The total amount of Greek credits held by the United States Treasury on Nov. 15, 1920, was $33,236,629.05, against which a special charge had been created.]

While discussing the conference to be held in London, it was said by M. Rhallis that King Constantine would probably sign the credentials of the Greek delegates.

M. Rhallis declared that he believed the United States would speak the last word regarding the revision of the Treaty of Sèvres, and continued:

"The friendship and good opinion of America is very precious to Greece, and I am sure Americans will protest against any modification of the treaty which would return Smyrna to the Turks. If the Greek army there should be taken away, the people of the city would be thrown back into their former condition of bondage, subjugation and peril."

The Premier said he would go to London as one of the Greek delegates, but added that the other delegates had not as yet been named. It is probable, however, that M. Gounaris, Minister of War, will not be one of the Greek representatives.

OUR TONNAGE SECOND IN DANZIG HARBOR

Nothing in 1913, It Was 233,403 Last Year, 23,061 Below England's.

Copyright, 1921, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Jan. 30.—Of vital interest to every one concerned with after-the-war developments in the shipping world are some statistics which have just become available. Although they refer only to one port, they afford a striking indication of what may be called the changed balance of power which the events of the last few years have brought about.

Let it be said at once that the outstanding point is the appearance of the American flag in the waters here. Before the war it was hardly ever seen in the port in question, which is Danzig. Ever since the changed status of that one-time German town was decided upon eager hopes have been directed to its potentialities. It was realized in many quarters that its situation at the mouth of the Vistula constituted it a centre of shipping trade for Northern and Eastern Europe and territories even further East. Reckoned in tonnage, Danzig's overseas traffic in 1920 was actually greater than in 1913, in which year it constituted a record.

This has come about in spite of the absence of two factors which had figured most largely in optimistic calculations—the reopening of trade with Russia and a great demand from Poland. The figures show that in 1920 3,886 ships of 1,967,600 net tonnage used Danzig, as against 5,765 ships of 1,861,691 net tonnage in 1913. It must be pointed out that these figures include both arrivals and sailings, so that the actual number of ships and the amount of tonnage are about half the total. A very important development is embodied in the fact that, although the tonnage last year was slightly higher than in 1913, the number of ships was nearly 1,000 less. In other words, the average size of ship was much greater.

The vast new overseas trade is principally due to the establishment of several regular passenger and freight services between Danzig and the United States, in addition to irregular arrivals from the same country of numerous smaller cargo steamers. For the greater part of this traffic with America is under the Stars and Stripes, which practically never waved in Danzig harbor before the war.

How striking is the general change among the principal sea-trading nations is illustrated by the table of comparisons of the nationality of incoming vessels. In 1913 the American tonnage entering Danzig was nil. In 1920 it amounted to 233,403 tons. The British figures were: for 1913, 78,492 tons; for 1920, 256,464. The German figures for 1913 were 536,480, and for 1920, 204,956 tons.

Massachusetts Building Trades Council Wants General Strike if Wages Are Cut

BOSTON, Jan. 30.—Cessation of work on all construction being done in the United States by members of the Building Trades Employers' Association of Boston will be recommended to the international officers of the Building Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, as the result of action taken here today at the special convention of the Massachusetts Building Trades Council, which assembled yesterday to consider the situation resulting from the building strike in this city.

Besides the endorsement of the Massachusetts Council, the recommendations also were approved by delegates from the other five New England States, who said the recommendations would be presented to the workers in their respective States.

The Executive Board of the Massachusetts Council will confer with American Federation of Labor officials tomorrow to inform them of the facts in the situation here.

A recommendation that all unions affiliated with the building trades stop work when an attempt is made to lower wages or change working conditions passed the convention unanimously.

James P. Meehan of Lawrence, Secretary of the Massachusetts Council, said in a statement that the members of the building trades industry viewed the present strike in Boston as "part and parcel of the open shop movement being promoted by employers in certain industries of this country."

"It is the sense of this convention," the statement continued, "that the Building Trades Employers' Association of Boston has identified itself with the open shop campaign launched in this country to disrupt organized labor and break down conditions that have taken more than half a century to build."

JAPANESE WELCOME MORRIS AGREEMENT

But Comment Is Cautious, in View of Need of Senate's Ratification.

CALL TERMS UNAVOIDABLE

Uchida Declares Them a Bar to Real Friendship—Sentry Admits Falsifying on Langdon.

TOKIO, Jan. 30 (Associated Press).—Cabled summaries of the alleged agreement reached between Roland S. Morris, the American Ambassador to Japan, and Mr. Shidehara, the Japanese Ambassador to the United States, concerning the dispute between the United States and Japan, have met with satisfaction.

The Japanese press generally welcomes the purported settlement, but comments cautiously on it, pointing out that the United States Senate has yet to ratify the agreement. Considerable approval is evinced over recent addresses in the United States by Ambassador Morris, whose utterances are characterized as being a fearless exposition of the controversy.

Referring to the negotiations in the Diet today, Viscount Uchida, the Foreign Minister, explained that further pourparlers might be necessary. The Foreign Minister admitted, as was contended by the Government's interpellator, Etsujiro Uehara, that the "gentlemen's agreement" minimized the chances of bringing the peoples of Japan and the United States into closer contact and was inconsistent with the attainment of real friendship, but said that this was unavoidable.

Japan, the Foreign Minister added, had not altered the application of military conscription to Japanese abroad. Though this appeared not to be pleasing to the Americans, nevertheless Japan generally had done her utmost to remove all obstacles to a genuine understanding with America. The Minister said that the agreement reached by the Ambassadors would be submitted to the Diplomatic Advisory Council.

Representative Nakano condemned what he called the Government's despotic policy in Formosa, charging that in 1915 the Japanese killed 20,000 aborigines, including women. Baron Kenjiro Den, Governor General of Formosa, in reply said that the killing of aborigines was a thing of the past. Efforts were being directed in Formosa to develop education and to have the people eventually have the same Government as that of Japan.

Minister Defends Navy Program.

Regardless of the naval program of the United States, the Japanese program requires completion of the eight battleship and eight cruiser unit, Vice Admiral Tomosaburo Kato, Minister of the Navy, said, in responding in the Diet yesterday to an interpellation by Lieut. Gen. Uehara, Chief of Staff, as to Japan's view of Senator Borah's resolution in the United States Senate concerning a cessation of warship construction. Japan's naval construction plan, however, the Minister added, need not be carried out with the United States as an imaginary enemy. He explained that he favored world curtailment of construction, if practicable, and said that Japan would adhere to such a plan.

It was regrettable, Minister Kato declared, that Japan's naval completion was interpreted as new expansion, when really it was inaugurated a decade ago and was born of imperative necessity. Even if fully completed, the Minister said, a wide margin would remain between the naval strength of Japan and the other powers.

Speaking of the army, War Minister Tanaka said that Japan's forces had been organized solely to insure the safety of her territorial rights. It was true, he declared, that, unlike in the past, neither Russia nor China could menace Japan, as it was impossible to conceive a Chinese invasion across Korea or a Russian attack on Saghalien. Any effective plan of defense, however, the Minister added, must pre-suppose the necessity of operations beyond Japan's frontiers.

Sentry Revised Story on Langdon.

Official inquiry has shown that the story first told by the sentry who shot and killed Lieutenant W. H. Langdon, of the United States cruiser Albany, at Vladivostok early this month, was contrary to facts and untrue, says the Asahi Shimbun of Osaka, which quotes Consul Kikuchi of the Political Department of the Japanese army. The Consul, it is said, has declared that the sentry canceled his statement. Emphasis is placed on the declaration that his action was not the result of interference or pressure by the Foreign Office or army authorities. The investigation of the incident was not influenced by political considerations, it is asserted.

"The fact that Admiral Albert Gleaves of the American Asiatic fleet left Vladivostok after a day's stay," the newspaper says, "shows that he recognized the sincere and upright attitude of the men conducting the inquiry."

Reports published today by the Yomuri Shimbun of this city to the effect that the sentry had been found guilty and that Japan would apologize to the United States for his action have not as yet been confirmed at the War Office. The newspaper asserted that the findings of the court-martial which tried the sentry had been received here.

The American Consul at Vladivostok has published an announcement that the United States had not asked any Government to lend assistance in protecting the lives and property of Americans in Siberia, and that he was not aware that any Government had made any such request.

BRITISH TO AVOID NAVAL RACE WITH US

Imperial Defense Subcommittee Does Not Favor Competitive Building.

FULL REPORT SUBMITTED

Findings Believed to Support Admiralty's Plan of Retarding Capital Construction.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—The Daily Chronicle's political correspondent writes:

"The inquiry as to naval strength and the Admiralty policy by a sub-committee of the Imperial Defense Committee is now concluded, and their report has been submitted to the Imperial Defense Committee. It will be for the latter body and for the Cabinet to consider further questions of policy which have been investigated and give their final decision on matters bearing on the shipbuilding program for the coming year.

"I gather that in the course of the inquiry some of the issues were changed. It was found that a decision on the strategical question whether the building of capital ships should be continued was not the immediate desideratum. The main question resolved itself eventually into this: Whether at the present time and in view of the world situation Britain is sufficiently prepared on the seas for war to justify the retarding of capital shipbuilding and, if so, in what degree and for how long. In other words, can we afford to take advantage of the state of the world and our supreme position on the seas to delay the building of capital ships until the lessons of the war are better appreciated by all nations?

"There is reason to believe that on this issue the sub-committee is content that the decision should coincide with the view taken in the highest responsible quarters of the world situation, provided that no vital change in naval policy is involved; and in this connection it must be borne in mind that to retard building does not necessarily mean to stop building.

"One of the chief factors is the relation between the shipbuilding policies of this country and the United States. It is not the view, as I understand, of the sub-committee that there should be competition in naval armaments between the two countries—a competition which, if once inaugurated, might lead to a situation fraught for both with needless anxieties. There is involved to some extent the question of psychology, for the intentions of the United States are as important in this regard as their actual program.

"On the value of the battleship in the light of the war's experience and the arguments for and against its retention as a main asset much expert evidence was given. Evidence was also given as to the need of revising relationship of the capital ship to auxiliaries, especially the submarine and the airplane."

TELLS OF SUFFERING IN WAR-TORN POLAND

Coningsby Dawson Says 500,000 Children Alone Depend on American Relief.

Coningsby Dawson, author and soldier, returned yesterday on the Aquitania from a six weeks' trip through Central Europe, on which he was sent by Herbert Hoover to report on the relief work. In an interview yesterday Mr. Dawson said that he wanted to tell the American people what the "American Relief" really stood for.

"Take one concrete example, Poland," he said. "Half a million children in the devastated regions would die if the feeding stations were not maintained there. The population of Poland are mostly refugees, who have been in the path of seven advancing armies, each of which has picked them a bit cleaner. Now they are on the verge of starvation—living on bark, grass and acorns, ground into flour and baked into bread that looks like cobblestones. The men and women can keep alive in some fashion, but the boys and girls will actually die of starvation without our help."

The present economic troubles of Central and Eastern Europe are largely due to the foreign exchange values, Mr. Dawson believes. The currency is practically worthless, and no one will use it as a basis of trade. All trading is done on the dollar basis, and the payment is made in crowns. No person is allowed to take more than 2,000 crowns (about $3.50) out of any of the countries of Central Europe. This makes travel prohibitive for any persons except those with enough wealth and influence to purchase letters of credit. Tariff barriers have been erected on all sides and no commerce is possible. He urges an extended system of food credits under American supervision as a remedy.

SAYS 13,000,000 STARVE IN RUSSIA

Anti-Red Conference in Paris Hears Famine Is as Bad as in China.

SEES FALL OF SOVIET NEAR

European Labor and Socialist Leaders Said to Be Turning From Bolsheviki to the Liberal Opposition.

The veil which for many months has completely hidden conditions in Russia owing to the action of the Soviet leaders in barring visitors from the rest of the world, is being withdrawn a little by the conference, now in session in Paris, of the All-Russian Constituent Assembly.

The prominent exiled Russians who opposed the rule of Lenin and Trotzky are now submerging their differences in an effort to present a united front against Bolshevism. They are disclosing in Paris reports from associates still in Russia picturing conditions imagined in part but not before clearly presented to the world, which has wondered what was going on under the greatest of all communist experiments.

These reports are being received by cable by A. J. Sack, Director of the Russian Information Bureau, who is the authorized spokesman in this country of all the Russian elements opposed to Bolshevism attending the Paris conference. In a statement yesterday, summing up the reports which have reached him, Mr. Sack said:

"The situation within Bolshevist Russia is critical. The economic life of the country is destroyed, according even to the Bolshevist official data. According to No. 256 of the official Bolshevist daily, Pravda, which contains a comparative table of manufacturing outputs for the first half year of 1920, as compared with the corresponding period of 1914, the present output of iron in Bolshevist Russia is only 12 per cent. of the output before the war; steel, 4 per cent.; cotton, 20 per cent.; coal, 25 per cent. The area under cultivation is only 24 per cent. as compared with land cultivated in 1914.

Crisis Revealed by Red Organ.

"This Winter not only the Russian cities and towns, but the Russian villages as well, are going through the torments of starvation. This is due not only to the decreased area of land under cultivation, but also to fatal crop failures in ten central provinces of Russia. According to the Pravda there are six provinces (Vitebsk, Kaluga, Orel, Riazin, Nijninovgorod and Perm) where only 50 per cent. of the minimum of required grains have been harvested, while in four provinces (Vladimir, Kostroma, Novgorod and Tula) only 25 per cent. of the required products have been gathered.

"That means that 13,000,000 people have begun to suffer acute starvation this January, and that 7,000,000 were already starving in December of last year. The famine in Russia this Winter is probably not less acute than in China.

"The Bolshevist régime is both a political and economic failure, and its downfall may be expected at any moment. After that two possibilities open before Russia. One is that the country will plunge into complete anarchy. If this should happen, the Russian crisis will last for many years, keeping all Europe and the rest of the world under great strain and preventing everywhere the return to normal economic and political conditions.

"The importance of the present Russian conference in Paris is in that it lays the foundation for unity of all the Russian democratic forces opposed to Bolshevism. For the first time since the Bolsheviki came into power in November, 1917, these democratic forces have united on one platform, which is the defense of popular rule and civil liberties, gained through the March Revolution of 1917, against the Red counter-revolution of Bolshevism which destroyed all liberty in Russia and substituted a new Red autocracy in place of the recent autocracy of the Czar's rule.

Labor Leaders Turning from Reds.

"It is being watched with warm sympathy by the statesmen in Paris and in Washington. Furthermore, the conference is supported by many of the labor and Socialist leaders of Europe who heretofore were either expressing their sympathy toward Bolshevism, or professing neutrality in the struggle going on in Russia.

"These leaders, being far from any enthusiasm toward Bolshevism, granted nevertheless their support to the Bolshevist elements in Russia at the time when the only alternative to such a Russian policy was to support the military movements against Bolshevism, the movements which were tainted, if not dominated, by reactionary elements tending to restore the old régime. At present, when the European labor and Socialist leaders have to choose between supporting Bolshevism, on the one hand, or the recuperating forces of the Russian democracy, on the other, they are naturally inclined to support democracy against Bolshevism.

SWISS SHIP VENTURE MEETS WITH DISASTER

Company Capitalized in War at 60,000,000 Francs Loses 50,000,000 Francs.

BERNE, Jan. 30.—The Swiss may be excellent hotelkeepers, waiters, watchmakers and money changers, but, judging by the result of their recent disastrous maritime union enterprise, they are not much at home in shipping.

During the war Switzerland thought she would like to have her own fleet and therefore chartered boats from a Belgian company to run between North and South America. For a short time, while freight rates were high, the enterprise paid, but when freight rates fell disaster came upon it, and now the company, known as the Swiss Maritime Union, with a capital of 60,000,000 francs, admits having lost more than 50,000,000 of them, and can furnish no clear explanation of whither the money went.

One Swiss, who lost money in this Maritime Union, admits that his countrymen had better stick to their Alps and leave sea faring to the Dutch, British and Americans and other seagoing nations.

Another industry which doesn't always flourish in Switzerland is that of motor cars. Recently the firm of Piccard Pictet of Geneva, motor car manufacturers, failed for 20,000,000 francs, and now another motor car firm, the largest in Switzerland, the Martini of Neuchatel, has declared itself bankrupt.

SILK STOCKINGS TABOOED.

Fur Coats and High Heels Also Barred in Paris Police Office.

PARIS, Jan. 30.—Women employed in the office of the Prefecture of Police are prohibited from wearing "luxuries" by an order issued today by Prefect Raux.

Silk stockings, diamond studded hairpins, fur coats, plumed hats and high heeled shoes are among the articles barred. The average wage paid the women and girls is 400 francs monthly, about $27 at the present rate of exchange. The order was issued to "curtail superfluous expenses" among the personnel of the office force in a general campaign of national economy. All Government bureaus are expected to follow suit.

Handcuffed Burglar Shoots And Kills Captor and Escapes

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Jan. 30.—Awakened by a burglar alarm, George A. Johnson, Postmaster at Nineveh Junction, and his son surprised a burglar at work in their store early this morning. The man was overpowered and handcuffed, but succeeded in reaching his gun when one of his captors went to the telephone. He shot and killed Lewis Johnson, the son, beat the elder man to unconsciousness and escaped.

'VOICE OF TROTZKY' ARRESTED IN NICE

French Police Seize Dr. Abramovitch and His Aids as Secret Soviet Agents.

CAPTURE MANY DOCUMENTS

By WALTER DURANTY.

PARIS, Jan. 30.—Dr. Abramovitch, a member of the "Extraordinary Commission" of Moscow, which is the real governing body of Soviet Russia, was arrested by French Secret Service agents yesterday in a luxurious apartment of one of the great hotels of the Promenade des Anglais at Nice. Today and yesterday the police also laid hands on a dozen of his subordinates engaged with him in building up a Communist organization in France on direct orders from Moscow. A vast amount of Bolshevist documents and correspondence between the Moscow authorities and Soviet agents here also has been seized.

Abramovitch is declared to be identical with the mysterious figure whose presence overshadowed the recent Socialist Congress at Tours when the Socialist Party voted adhesion to Moscow's Third Communist Internationale by a large majority. Known as "the ear of Moscow" or "the voice of Trotzky," this mysterious personage of whom every one was talking, but whom no one had met, was supposed to be dictating every word and every step of the victorious radicals at Tours. No resolution was put before the assembly without his approval, no manifesto was issued unless it had passed his censorship. In vain Longuet and other moderate leaders inveighed against his control, in vain they demanded that at least he should come out into the open. The veil of secrecy was never lifted and protests of the moderates were crushed by the weight of the radical steamroller.

But, nevertheless, say the French police, it was his visit to Tours that led to Abramovitch's capture. Despite radical vigilance, secret agents of the Government identified him there under the name of Dr. Zalewski. Instead of arresting him forthwith, they traced him back to Paris, where he was living in a comfortable apartment in Montmartre with his wife and baby daughter.

During the whole of the present month he never moved a step without official surveillance and gradually the net was spread to include not only his lieutenants but all of his correspondence. About the middle of the month there came a warning from one of Abramovitch's own secret agents that the police had got wind of the affair. For a week the Communists lay very low, but as nothing happened, they regained courage, and in one of the letters seized there is the phrase, "We continue working under the noses of the stupid police."

When the trap was sprung yesterday and in the early hours of this morning nearly a score of conspirators in addition to their leader were caught by the "stupid police." So far only one Frenchman has been arrested, a man named Houine, who is unknown even in Socialist circles. The rest are either Russians or Serbs; eight of the latter were arrested today.

During the last twenty-four hours the police have been raiding a number of places identified as Communist centres. At an unpretentious villa in the suburban district of Antony they made a great haul of documents. Most of them are still unexamined, but enough already has been found, the police say, to rate the discovery as most important.

They are said to show, first, that Abramovitch is a figure of sinister interest, a personal friend of Trotzky, a member of the Russian Government and secret dictator of the French Communist Party; second, that he is acting on direct orders from Moscow, with which he is in weekly contact; third, that large sums of Russian money have been received by him through Germany and Czechoslovakia for work in France; fourth, that his Communist machine here does not confine its activities to France alone, but directs offshoot organizations in neighboring countries for which a great deal of propaganda in various languages has been prepared, only to fall into the hands of the police.

SWITZERLAND FIRM ON SOVIET RELATIONS

Parliament Rejects Socialist Motion to Resume Trade and Extend Recognition.

BERNE, Jan. 30.—To a motion in the Swiss Parliament, brought forward by the Socialists, which demanded the immediate resumption of commercial relations between Switzerland and Russia and the official recognition of the Soviet republic, ex-President Motta, now head of the political department, replied that Switzerland could not resume either political or commercial relations with the Soviet republic. Russia, he declared, could not export anything, and although she pays in gold it is gold which has been confiscated from private citizens, including Swiss domiciled in Russia.

M. Motta instanced the English judicial decision that commercial firms had no right to accept such gold, as by so doing they risked becoming liable to prosecution as receivers of stolen goods. Private citizens, he added, might continue to trade with Russia by barter but entirely at their own risks, the Swiss Government taking no responsibility for their losses. M. Motta described Soviet rule as revolutionary and having nothing in common with democracy.

The Soviet Government has already appointed a representative in Switzerland, a Socialist member of the Swiss Parliament named Platten, who, however, is now serving a sentence for trying to promote insubordination in the Swiss army. Except the Socialist members, the Swiss Parliament strongly approved the Government's decision not to have any official relations with Bolshevist Russia.

AIRPLANE FALLS IN MEXICO.

Flight From Los Angeles to the Capital Is Abandoned.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 29.—The flight of a metal airplane from the United States to Mexico City and the dropping of colored lights on Chapultepec Castle has failed through the crash of the airplane at San Luis Potosi, 600 miles from Mexico City. The company states it will not make more trial flights, but will ship machines by railroad to Mexico City. The crash at San Luis Potosi completely wrecked the airplane. This is the second airplane wrecked on the trip from Los Angeles to Mexico City. Aviators state the high altitude of Mexico City requires an immense landing field, owing to the high rate of landing speed.

The American made airplane which flew from Nebraska to Mexico City and then to Tampico and return is still flying without one failure.

1,233% DIVIDEND IN PACKERS' STOCK

Morris & Co.'s Report Shows Unannounced Capitalizing of $37,000,000 Surplus.

LAST YEAR "UNPROFITABLE"

Net Gains Dropped to $4,270,598, and $2,955,710 Surplus Was Used.

COMPANY OWNED BY A FEW

Nelson Morris's Heirs and Estate of Edward Morris Have All Its Shares.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—The declaration of a stock dividend of 1,233 per cent. is revealed in the annual report of Morris & Co., packers, made public today. The company has increased its capital stock from $3,000,000 to $40,000,000 by capitalizing $37,000,000 of surplus. The new stock consists of $27,000,000 common and $10,000,000 preferred, which is to pay 7 per cent. annually and on which an initial dividend is expected to be paid within a few months.

The distribution of the new stock took place some time ago, but no announcement was made. The stockholders received nine shares of new common and three and one-third shares of preferred. The company is a closed corporation, all the stock except a few shares held by officers being owned by the heirs of Nelson Morris, founder of the business, and the estate of Edward Morris.

The heirs are Mrs. Maurice L. Rothschild, Mrs. Maud Martineau of London and Ira Nelson Morris, while sharing in the estate of Edward Morris are Mrs. Helen Nelson, Nelson Morris, Chairman of the board of the company; Edward Morris, President, and the Misses Muriel and Ruth Morris.

The year ended Oct. 30, 1920, was a very unprofitable one, both in the livestock and the packing business, Nelson Morris, Chairman of the board, says in his report. A deficit of $2,955,710 is shown for the year's operations. This amount was taken from surplus, which, after the stock distribution, now amounts to $13,271,796. Net profits declined to $4,270,598 from $6,845,472 in the previous year.

Inventory, according to Mr. Morris, was cut nearly in half. The increase in packing house and branch market investments in the balance sheet represents actual expenditures. Quick assets of over $60,000,000 stand three to one against net quick liabilities.

"While I do not look for any decided boom this coming year, there is no doubt the 'corner has been turned' and that our business should improve from now on," concludes Mr. Morris.

MILLIONAIRE SELLING CHEAP SHOES TO SWISS

Makers Protest His Methods, but Socialists Threaten to Strike if He Is Checked.

Copyright, 1921, by The New York Times Company.

BERNE, Jan. 30.—Owing to the high price of shoes, poor people in Italian Switzerland have long been wearing either clogs or shoes full of holes, while poor children went barefoot. The price of a common pair of shoes was 40 to 50 francs.

A multi-millionaire of Lugano named Battista Beretta Piccoli, who amassed a fortune in America, bought a quantity of leather at wholesale and had it made into shoes in Italy. Then he imported these shoes into Switzerland and offered them for sale to his fellow townspeople in Lugano at from 20 francs per pair downwards. The local tradespeople immediately lowered their prices for shoes to 20 francs per pair, and the Luganese population, rich and poor, are now wearing new shoes.

Swiss shoemakers have petitioned the Government to prevent this multimillionaire from flooding the country with cheap shoes made in Italy, as he at present means to do, as he intends to sell them in other Swiss cantons, where shoes can still be bought only at high prices. The Socialists for once are applauding a millionaire and assert that if the Government prevents his operation they will declare a strike.

Signor Beretta says that he is not selling shoes for charity but purely as a business transaction, and that any profit he makes he will use for supplying the very poorest people with shoes free. Owing to the Italian lira being worth only 22 centimes instead of one franc this millionaire can get shoes made in Italy 60 per cent. cheaper than in Switzerland.

PROPOSES A FIVE-YEAR DICTATORSHIP IN SPAIN

Clerical Writer Says Parliamentary Government Has Shown Its Corruption and Incapacity.

MADRID, Jan. 30.—The Clerical newspaper, El Debate, in an editorial today, agrees with the assertion of the Syndicalists that the Parliamentary Government has been a failure in Spain. The editorial was written by Professor Fernando Perez Bueno of Madrid University, who suggests the suppression of Parliament for a period of five years on the ground that it has lost even the appearance of respectability and decorum.

"Discussion of the validity of the writs returning the Deputies shows continual misdemeanors and frauds," the editorial says. "Can we expect such men to govern us properly? What we need is the closing of the Cortes, suppression of universal suffrage and also trial by jury and removal of the municipal and provincial Diets. At the same time a dictatorial Cabinet should be formed which would immediately prepare a budget and take over great rural and urban properties, especially when unproductive, and also industrial, mining and banking wealth. Within five years it could make Spain a modern country.

"Reforms are needed in hygiene, education, transportation and the army, with the suppression of gambling, the introduction of a system for provisioning the country and the furnishing of cheap houses. After five years such a dictatorial Government could call the Cortes and undertake to reform the Constitution."

El Debate says an enormous body of public opinion in the country is in favor of such a scheme.

Quartet Representing Combined Universities of Nation Will Race at Penn.

ANDREE TO BE A MEMBER

Noted Athlete Will Probably Bring Over Same Runners Who Competed in Olympic Games.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 30.—A relay team representing the combined universities of France will take part in the University of Pennsylvania relay carnival to be held on Franklin Field here April 29 and 30.

Definite word was received today by the Pennsylvania relay management that such a team of French athletes would cross the Atlantic early in April in order to compete. It was said at the university that never before in the history of athletics had a similar French organization competed in America.

The Frenchmen, it is added, probably will enter the one-mile race. George Andrée, second in the high jump event at the Stockholm Olympics in 1912, will be a member of the team. Andrée has given up the high jump and has developed into one of the fastest quarter-milers and hurdlers in France. He was a member of the French team that finished third in the Olympic championship relay race last year.

Andrée wrote that he probably would bring over the same team, composed of Delvart, Ferry, Mercery and himself.

More than sixty American colleges and universities have accepted invitations to participate in the carnival so far. They include Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Cornell, Dartmouth, Columbia, Missouri, Nebraska, Michigan and Wisconsin.

MILLER WINS ROAD RACE.

Defeats Glencoe Runner by Scant Margin of Two Yards.

Victor Miller of the Harbrook Heights A. C. broke the tape first in the weekly Harlem handicap road run held yesterday under the auspices of the Comet Athletic Club. After trailing the pack for more than four miles, Miller broke to the front in the last quarter mile and preceded W. Gladding of the Glencoe A. C. to the finish line by the slim margin of two yards.

Slippery going kept the pace down considerably, the streets over which the course led being in bad condition after the rain. The course began at the Comet A. C. clubhouse, 12 Moylan Place, went up Amsterdam Avenue to 125th Street, through to Broadway, across the viaduct to Seventh Avenue, down to 125th Street and back to the clubhouse.

J. Barrett of the Glencoe A. C. set the pace to 135th Street, but passing over the viaduct Gladding caught him and held the lead for several miles. When Gladding was only a quarter of a mile from the finish line Miller put on steam, and with a burst of speed drew up even with the Glencoe runner. In the last 400 yards the pair fought it out in a spirited struggle, but Miller had a two-yard margin when he reached the final mark.

Barrett captured third honors, behind Gladding, and M. J. Tea of the Glencoe Club was fourth. Miller's actual time was 23:43 and his handicap 2:23.

S. Silverstein, another Glencoe representative, started from scratch, and he won fast time laurels with 22:32, but was not able to get up in the field, finishing seventh. Silverstein holds the record for the course, set in last Sunday's race.

The summaries:

Pos.	Name, and Club.	Hdcp.	Actual Time.
1—V. Miller, H'brook Hts A.L.		2:00	23:43
2—W. Gladdin, Glencoe A. C.		3:15	24:58

PICKED FOR PENTATHLON,

West, Star W. and J. Athlete, Is Headed for All-Around Honors.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Pa., Jan. 30.—Washington and Jefferson track authorities announced today that Charles West of Washington, star negro athlete, who was a halfback on the varsity football team last Fall as a freshman, would in all probability be entered in the National Pentathlon at the Penn Track Carnival in Philadelphia on April 27, being the first man from the institution ever to be entered as a competitor. West holds the Western Pennsylvania scholastic record for the 440-yard dash and excels in both track and field events.

CHAMPIONSHIP DATES SET.

National A. A. U. Track Meet at Los Angeles July 1, 2 and 4.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 30.—The dates of the National Amateur Athletic Union track and field championship meet for 1921, to be held in Pasadena, Cal., have been fixed tentatively for July 1, 2 and 4, Robert S. Weaver, National President, announces. Eastern competitors, he said, would be asked if these dates meet with their approval.

ROBINS' DRY DOCK WINS.

Defeats New York Soccer Team in Tight Match, 3 to 2.

Once more illustrating the variableness of soccer form, the team now representing the New York Football Club, after having defeated the Erie easily a week before, succumbed yesterday by the score of 3 goals to 2 to Robins Dry Dock in the National League championship match at Todd Field, Brooklyn. The Robins had lost league games both to Erie and Bethlehem, but came back strong against New York, gaining two points in the league table. In this way the dockers worked directly into the hands of Bethlehem, now leading by a comfortable margin.

At half time yesterday the score stood at 1 to 0 for New York, the lead having been gained through a penalty against Clarke midway in the first half. Kelly negotiated the kick.

The Robins tied the score five minutes after the restart, when Hosie, from a mixup, slipped one by Bell in goal. Fifteen minutes later a smart bit of work on the part of McKenna netted the ball, placing the Robins ahead. A hard drive by Herd went through Renaulli's hands, and the score was even once more. With less than five minutes to go Clarke headed in the winning goal off a corner kick by Sundberg.

The line-up:

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—Saloons made crooks, but neither license nor crooks are going to spoil baseball, Federal Judge K. M. Landis, Baseball Commissioner, said today in an address at the First Presbyterian Church in Evanston.

"Now that I am in baseball, just watch the game I play," said the Judge. "If I catch any crook in baseball, the rest of his life is going to be a pretty hot one. I'll go to any means and do anything possible to see that he gets a real penalty for his offense."

ATHLETIC LEAGUE DECLARED DEFUNCT

Intersectional Association of Greater City Dissolved—New One to Be Formed.

The intersectional Athletic League, composed of athletic leagues from Harlem, lower Manhattan, Long Island, Yorkville and the Bronx, has been disbanded, it was learned yesterday. Although official announcement was lacking, it was ascertained that a meeting of the organization was held on Saturday night at the Yorkville A. C., and the decision of the delegates was that the I. A. L. should go out of existence. Dwindling interest by some of the member leagues was given as the cause of the action.

A new organization, to be known as the Manhattan-Bronx Athletic League, will probably take the place of the defunct association. For the present it will have three members—the Harlem Heights Athletic League, the Lower Manhattan Athletic League and the Bronx Athletic League. Other members of the old organization were the Long Island A. L. and the Yorkville A. L., and they will be admitted if, in the opinion of the new association, they show enough renewed activity.

The delegates to Saturday night's meeting elected as temporary President Joseph Hewes of the Glencoe A. C., and as temporary Secretary Irving Lehman of the Morningside A. C. A second meeting has been called for Thursday evening at St. Mary's Catholic Union, 361 East 151st Street, the Bronx, when permanent officers will be elected and organization then effected.

For the time being all activities of the member leagues will cease along with the death of the parent organization. The Harlem Heights A. L., which has been conducting a weekly road run on Sundays, turned the race over to the Comet A. C. yesterday, which held it as an open affair. Until the new Manhattan-Bronx A. L. comes into formal existence the member leagues will not function. The main activities of the old Intersectional A. L. were track events and road runs.

TEBOS SPRING SURPRISE.

Defeat Federal Shipyards, Which Experiments With New Men.

Tebo Yacht Basin soccers, leaders in the New York State League, surprised the talent yesterday by downing the Federal Shipyards team of the National League by the score of 4—0 at Harrison Field. Fifteen hundred people witnessed the discomfiture of the Federals, who paid the penalty for trying out several new men against the Tebos. By half time the winners had established a 3—0 lead.

After three minutes of play, Puxty shot the first goal. Mitchell and Shaw added a goal apiece before change of ends. Puxty scored again in the second half.

The line-up:

ASTORIAS PUT OUT RIVALS.

Catholic Club Soccerites Eliminated From Cup Competition.

Whitewashing its opponents, who held it scoreless in the first half, the soccer team of the Astoria Football Club eliminated the Catholic Club of West Harlem from the second round of the annual cup competition of the Southern New York State Football Association at Astoria yesterday afternoon, 2 to 0.

A long run of fifty yards through a rain-soaked part of the field on the part of Frost, Astoria's centre forward, yielded the first goal. Frost also negotiated a penalty kick allowed against Kearney, right back on the visiting team.

The line-up:

ASTORIA (2).		CATHOLIC CLUB (0).

CLAN MACDUFF WINNER.

Soccer Victory Over Yonkers Places It Within Point of Tebo.

Clan MacDuff worked up to within one point of Tebo Yacht Basin in the New York State League yesterday by defeating Yonkers by 2 goals to 1 at Harlem Field. Yonkers took the lead when McMurtrie found the clansmen's net. Alderton equalized five minutes after the restart and J. Kennedy shot the winning goal for Clan MacDuff.

The line-up:

Two Star Bouts on Card.

Two twelve-round bouts top the card for the weekly show of the Star Sporting Club tonight. Jimmy Kane of Yorkville will engage Young Eddy, Connecticut lightweight champion, in one of the leading bouts and in the other Willie Gilligan, west side featherweight, and Jack Hauser of the east side will throw gloves at each other. A six-round skirmish will bring together Harry London and Johnny Green.

Whirlwind Five Victor.

The Whirlwind five of Manhattan defeated the St. Peter quintet of Yonkers last night by a score of 48 to 15 at the Twenty-second Regiment Armory. The playing of Milligan of the defeated team featured the contest.

Followers of Sport Applaud King Albert's Offer—Question of Date Discussed.

News that King Albert I. of Belgium had offered a suitable cup for a yacht race from Sandy Hook to Ostend, Belgium, open to sailing yachts of any size, rig and nationality, was the chief topic of conversation wherever yachtsmen gathered yesterday, and interest in the race, which is scheduled to start on July 4 next, was not confined to yachtsmen by any means.

It was the general opinion that the event would greatly benefit the sport of yachting and remove the false impression that yachts are mere playthings for smooth, protected waters, which was formed in the minds of so many after the America's Cup races last July, when both the Resolute and the Shamrock IV. sped from the blow off Sandy Hook to the shelter that neck of land affords.

A few yachting sharps pointed out that some of the reports of the proposed race stated that only the largest craft would have any chance to win, and intimated that speed depended entirely upon length of the yacht. This, they said, was erroneous, as, during a voyage across the Atlantic, both light and strong breezes would be encountered, and in the light breezes the smaller, lighter craft would have all the advantage over the larger, heavier ones.

Some thought it might be much better if the race were to be started in the middle or latter part of May, when stronger and practically uniform westerly breezes might be expected, rather than in July, when much lighter breezes generally prevail and, as a rule, are from the southward and even southeastward as much as from the westward. It was pointed out, however, that the competing yachts were liable to get as much reaching as any other point of sailing, and that is the speediest. The reason for the lateness of the start is the prevailing weather off the British coast earlier, as well as the fact that the popular resort does not really become active until July.

Practically every yachtsman spoken to on the subject yesterday had his own list of craft that he thought available for the contest. Among the popular choices were the Atlantic, winner of the Kaiser's pewter mug; the Elena, the Undaunted and the Elfay. Several expressed the opinion that Sir Thomas Lipton's 23-meter Shamrock, if given a fair-sized ketch rig, which is easily possible, would stand a good chance of taking the prize.

Within the next few days further details will be made public regarding the race, including the committee to start it. It is believed that the entries will begin to arrive at the office of the Belgian Consul General in this city, Pierre Mali, located at 25 Madison Avenue, within a few days.

WELLING GETS RETURN BOUT

Chicago Lightweight to Meet Leonard at St. Louis.

Benny Leonard, world's lightweight champion, and Joe Welling, Chicago contender for the title, have been matched for a return bout, it became known yesterday. The boxers will clash in an eight-round, no-decision contest at St. Louis Feb. 25, according to an announcement from Tommy Gray, who, with Nate Lewis, attends to Welling's ring affairs. Negotiations for the match have been in progress for the past several weeks. Promoters of New York, Pittsburgh, where ten-round bouts to a decision are permitted, were also seeking this ring attraction.

Welling, despite his knockout defeat in his bout against the champion at Madison Square Garden, is still unconvinced that Leonard is his master. In their previous meeting the Chicagoan went down to defeat in fourteen rounds, when Leonard had his rival battered beyond hope and on the very verge of a knockout. Since then Welling has campaigned ceaselessly for another chance at the title, confident that the previous meeting's experience will serve him well.

It is understood that negotiations are now under way for an eight-round bout bstween Welling and Pinkey Mitchell, Milwaukee lightweight, who recently held Willie Jackson to a draw at the Garden. Philadelphia promoters who are eager to secure this match have submitted tempting inducements for the boxers to agree to a bout at the Olympia A. A. in the Quaker City Feb. 14.

CONFER ON BOUT TODAY.

Rickard and Brady Will Discuss Dempsey-Carpentier Interests.

Another stage in the tangled affairs of the $500,000 championship bout between Jack Dempsey and Georges Carpentier will be reached some time today when Tex Rickard and William A. Brady confer on the transfer of the latter's interest in the bout to the Garden landlord. Rickard said yesterday that he expected to obtain the interests of both Brady and Charles B. Cochran, the English theatrical manager and promoter. The latter has not yet answered Rickard's cablegram asking for Cochran's stand in the bout tangle, but Rickard said that he has been definitely informed that Brady has been given authority to act for the English promoter.

Jack Kearns, Dempsey's manager, who will arrive here today, will probably go into conference with Rickard either today or tomorrow. The main purpose of the discussion, it was said, will be about the Dempsey-Willard bout, which Rickard plans to stage in Madison Square Garden on March 17. Rickard would not say whether he intends to seek a new arrangement whereby both Carpentier and Dempsey will box on a percentage basis, but it is believed that the Garden promoter will take up this point in his talk with Dempsey's manager.

ARMY POLOISTS TRIUMPH.

Defeat Princeton in Two Fast Contests in West Point Hall.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, N. Y., Jan. 30.—In two fast contests played in the big riding hall here, the Army's indoor polo team defeated Princeton twice, winning the first game by a score of 5 to 2 and capturing the second by 4 to 2. Four teams participated in the play. The Princetonians were mounted on Army ponies. The lineup:

PRINCETON 1ST TM.	ARMY 1ST TEAM.

No. 2—Beattie	Hughes
No. 3—Stillwell	Klein
PRINCETON 2D TM.	ARMY 2D TEAM.
No. 1—Bathgate	Pierce
No. 2—Hall	Clark
No. 3—Roberts	Raynsford

Goals—First Game—Stadler (2), Cross (2), Hughes (2), Klein. Second Game — Hall, Bathgate, Pierce (2), Clark (2).

Referee—Major Wilson. Time of periods—Four of 7½ minutes each.

MICHIGAN TO GO TO COAST.

Will Meet Univ. of California in Dual Track Meet This Spring.

BERKELEY, Cal., Jan. 30.—Track and field athletes of the University of California and the University of Michigan will compete in a dual meet here April 9, it was announced today. Each university will be represented by a fifteen-man team.

The California football schedule of nine games, all with Pacific Coast teams, also was announced today. University of Michigan had asked for a game at Ann Arbor, Nov. 5, but the invitation was declined, as California had scheduled a game on the coast for that date.

Tyrconnel Celts Win Handily.

Completely outplaying their opponents in the second period, the Tyrconnel Celts gained a decisive victory by 5 goals to 1 over the Vikings in the Metropolitan League match at Taft's Oval yesterday.

Asylum Official Denies Sale of Site to Yankees—Contract Signed, Says Engineer.

Flat contradiction developed yesterday as to the facts regarding the Yankees' proposed new stadium. On the one hand, P. P. Evans, Vice President of the Osborn Engineering Company of Cleveland, declared that the contract had been finally signed and many of the plans were ready for the erection of the stadium. The site is stated to be that now occupied by the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, at 136th Street, near Broadway.

On the other hand, Judge Joseph E. Newburger, President of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, denied that the property had been sold. In a letter to THE NEW YORK TIMES, Judge Newburger said: "Permit me to inform you that there is no option outstanding for the sale of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, nor are there any negotiations pending."

Judge Newburger supplemented this declaration verbally by saying: "Nor has any sale been consummated."

Says Contract Is Signed.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 30.—The contract already has been finally signed and many of the drawings and plans are ready for the Yankees' new stadium, which is to be the biggest in the world, so P. P. Evans, Vice President of the Osborn Engineering Company, 2,333 Prospect Avenue, Cleveland, specialist in the construction of baseball plants, said today.

The stadium will cost three times as much as the home of the Boston Braves, which required an outlay of $500,000. Rise in the cost of building materials accounts for some of the difference in cost.

The Osborn Company built the modern steel and concrete baseball plants used by the Boston Braves and the Cleveland Indians, the Polo Grounds stadium and the Detroit and Toledo stadiums.

WOMEN TEAM WITH PROS.

Miss Fenn and A. Ritchie Lead in Four-Ball Handicap Golf Match.

Special to The New York Times.

PALM BEACH, Fla., Jan. 30.—In the four-ball handicap golf match played over the Palm Beach Country Club course this afternoon, ten leading women golfers were teamed with professionals and the medal score was made by Miss Bessie Fenn and Alex Ritchie, whose aggregate score was 160. Mrs. Ernest Byfield and Arthur Fenn were second with a score of 168.

Miss Elaine Rosenthal and Joseph Stein were third, their aggregate score being 171. The other scores were: Mrs. Quentin Feltner and Edward Towns, 171; Mrs. Douglas W. Paige and Wm. Hamilton Robertson, 175; Mrs. John M. L. Rutherford and Fred Rigdan, 178; Miss Lois Stumer and George Gordon, 183; Miss Aline Stumer and Fred Clarkson, 183; Mrs. McDonald and Arthur Goss, 189, and Miss Dorothy Klots and Gordon Smith, 190.

GOLFERS FINISH ALL EVEN.

Amateur-Pro Foursome at Belleair Heights, Fla., Ends in Tie.

Special to The New York Times.

BELLEAIR HEIGHTS, Fla., Jan. 30.—An amateur-pro golf match played here today, with Alex Smith, local pro, paired with R. A. Stranahan of Toledo, against Sam Belfor, another local pro, and Ellsworth Augustus, finished all even.

SUGGESTS RULE CHANGES.

Extra Period After Tie Football Game, Bankart's Recommendation.

Larry Bankart, former Dartmouth football star and until last year coach at Colgate, suggests two changes in the football rules in a letter to The Harvard Crimson. His main suggestion is that tie games be settled by playing an extra period, as in basketball and most other intercollegiate sports. Bankart believes that tie games are completely unsatisfactory and argues further that playing an extra period would enable the use of additional players and would thus encourage more candidates coming out in the hope of being used in some of the contests.

Another rule change that Bankart recommends is that goals after touchdown be made from scrimmage, thus giving teams that are not strong in the placement kicking department a chance to prevent a single unopposed opponent from adding one point to the score.

Bankart is opposed to the recommendation of Coach Zuppke of Illinois that running with a recovered fumble be prohibited. He also disapproves of Percy Haughton's suggestion that incompleted forward passes behind the line of scrimmage be recoverable, as is the case with fumbles.

Bright to Meet Brandt Tonight.

Harvey Bright, young Brooklyn fighter, will mingle with "Dutch" Brandt of Flatbush in the feature bout of fifteen rounds at tonight's show of the Broadway Exhibition Company, at Halsey Street, near Broadway, Brooklyn. Murray Allen and Matty Murphy will meet in a ten-round affair, and there will be two battles of six rounds each.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 30.—The announcement of the Naval Academy some time ago that it was willing to adopt the usual collegiate eligibility rules, if requested by its opponents, was given force yesterday when all first-year men were dropped out in the swimming match against Princeton. The Navy thus lost the services of Sinclair, the 220-yard champion, and other high-grade men. The Academy has also signified its willingness to conform to the rules governing any branch of sport to which it is admitted.

HERRON CAPTURES RICH CUBAN PURSE

Wins President Menocal Handicap at Havana and Breaks Track Record.

HAVANA, Cuba, Jan. 30.—Spurred on by the cheers of 8,000 persons, Herron, racing in the colors of the Alveres Stable, won the President Menocal Handicap at one mile and a quarter at Oriental Park today. The victory of the colt was perhaps the most popular ever recorded on the island. In leading home a fine field, Herron created a new track record, when he ran the distance in the remarkably fast time of 2:06 3-5, which is just two-fifths of a second faster than the old mark. The colt defeated Sea Prince, a despised outsider in the betting, by a nose, while Rancher was four lengths back. The race carried a net value of $4,925, and was one of the richest events to be decided at the Cuban track.

Sea Prince and Sweep Clean alternated in the lead for the first mile. Then Sweep Clean quit. Sea Prince drew away, but in the last sixteenth, Herron, under Kelsay's powerful ride, responded gamely to urging and, closing with a rush, caught Sea Prince in the last stride and won.

The pace was terrific from the start. The quarter was run in 0:23 3-5, half mile in 0:46 2-5; six furlongs in 1:11 3-5; mile in 1:38 3-5, and the mile and a quarter in 2:03 3-5.

The Marin Handicap, which attracted a fair field of sprinters, resulted in a victory for Sirroco, the favorite. His margin at the end was only a head. Guaranteed was second, with Henry G. third.

GARDEN SHOW TO RESUME.

Shooting, Boxing and Swimming on Program Today After Sunday Halt.

Madison Square Garden, where the Sportsman's Show is holding forth, was dark yesterday when an attempt to stage shooting events failed because permits were not forthcoming.

The first event today will be the qualifying rounds of the indoor amateur and professional trap shooting, beginning at 11 o'clock. Other afternoon competitions will be boxing exhibitions, consisting of two three-round bouts under the auspices of the A. A. U., an exhibition of high diving by K. P. Speedy, and 60-yard novice swimming trial heats for men.

His Manager Calls Curley's Action Rank Injustice—Will Fight It to Finish.

While victims of Ed ("Strangler") Lewis have been rather reticent on the action of Promoter Jack Curley in putting the ban on the much-discussed headlock in future matches held under his supervision here, Lewis himself has entered a rebuttal in no uncertain terms. His retort comes in a telegraphic message from Billy Sandow, his manager, in which Sandow protests vehemently against Curley's action. He charges that Curley has perpetrated a rank injustice against the champion and that his man has received a very raw deal. Furthermore, he adds that other promoters, following Curley's example, are cancelling matches on Lewis, and that the champion is losing lots of money as a result. In conclusion, he states that the champion will fight Curley's move to a bitter finish.

In his reply the local mat impresario points out that his action was taken as the result of public sentiment and for the best interests of wrestling in this city. Curley believes that he will be able to explain the matter satisfactorily to Lewis and Sandow and save any unpleasant controversy with them.

Meanwhile Earl Caddock, through his manager, Gene Melady, has wired that he is quite ready and willing to meet Jim Londos for the light-heavyweight championship, and that Feb. 14 is acceptable to him. In the past Caddock has never made weight an issue in his matches, taking on all comers regardless of their avoirdupois. For this reason he has never made formal claim to the light-heavyweight title, though he is within the limit for that division. Londos, on the other hand, recognizing limitations, has claimed the championship. Their approaching match will serve to settle this dispute definitely.

Jack Herman is trying his best to get a match with Lewis for Stanislaw Zbyszko. Herman states that Zbyszko will wrestle Lewis and allow him to use the headlock if he chooses. According to reports from the West Miss Anne Morgan may arrange to bring the two together in Chicago in a match, from which the net proceeds will go to the Fund for Devastated France. The Windy City will not stand for her putting on a boxing match there, but does not bar wrestling.

PICKS ALL-AMERICA TEAM IN ATHLETICS

Secretary Rubien of A. A. U. Gives Prominent Place to Olympic Victors.

NINE MEN TWICE HONORED

College Stars Selected for Two of the Mythical Aggregations—Many Changes Since Last Year.

As formidable a collection of stars as could well be assembled has been selected for inclusion in the mythical All-America Athletic Team for 1920 by Secretary Frederick W. Rubien of the Amateur Athletic Union, and incorporated in the annual issue of Spalding's Official Athletic Almanac for 1921. Changes are many in the latest selections of Secretary Rubien. In the three mythical aggregations, athletic, college and scholastic teams, there are fifteen athletes whose performances throughout the last calendar year entitled them, in the estimation of the A. A. U. official, to retention in the events for which they were selected on the 1919 teams. Eleven of these are renamed for the athletic team, three for the college team and one for the scholastic team.

On the collegiate team, Charley Paddock, University of Southern California, who last year was picked for the century, is installed as the leading furlong sprinter of the college world. On the scholastic team, Harry Helme, Buffalo star, and Carl Beck, Harrisburg (Pa.) Tech H. S., are retained, but not in the events in which they were named on the 1919 team.

Included in the athletic team are Uncle Sam's eight victors in the Olympic games held last Summer at Antwerp. The collegians among these history-making athletes enjoy the further distinction of being selected also for the college team. The Olympiad victors include Charley Paddock, 100-meter champion; Allen Woodring, 200-meter title-holder; Hallock H. Brown, 3,000 meter champion; Frank Loomis, 400-meter hurdles; R. Dick Landon, high jump; Frank Foss, pole vault; Pat McDonald, 56-pound weight, and Pat Ryan, 16-pound hammer.

Altogether, nine athletes have the distinction of being selected for both the athletic and college teams. Paddock is picked for the 100 and 220 yard dashes; Earl Eby of Pennsylvania for the half-mile run; Hallock Brown for the two-mile run; Earl Thomson of Dartmouth, an Olympic winner for Canada, for the 120-yard hurdles; E. W. Wells, Stanford University, 220-yard hurdles; Landon for the high jump; Sol Butler, University of Dubuque, broad jump; A. R. Pope, University of Washington, for the discus, and Everett Bradley, University of Kansas, for the pentathlon.

The teams selected by Secretary Rubien follow:

CUTLER READY FOR BELGIAN.

Billiardist Who Tackles Horemans Runs 267 in Practice.

That Edouard Horemans, the Belgian billiardist, will face his most severe test since coming to this country when he tackles Albert Cutler in a 2,400-point match, beginning at Maurice Daly's this afternoon, has been proved by the fact that in private practice for the match Cutler made a run of 267. They will play six blocks of 400 points each at 18.2 balkline in afternoon and evening sessions, continuing through Thursday night.

Comment on Current Events in Sports.

YACHTING

King Albert of Belgium has offered a cup for a race from Sandy Hook to that famous Belgian watering place, Ostend, to take place next Summer, the race to be open to all types and sizes of yachts and to be for the championship of the seas and "the encouragement of wholesome deep sea yachting."

Following that fiasco of last Summer during the America's Cup races, when on one day both the Resolute and the Shamrock IV. put back behind Sandy Hook to seek the protection that strip of land afforded against a moderately heavy blow and something of a sea, this proposed contest comes as a welcome opportunity for those who possess vessels suitable to demonstrate that yachting is not merely a fair weather pastime limited to such waters as are so situated that a safe harbor may be found whenever it starts to blow.

That yachting is such a pastime is the opinion of a great majority of people formed after the memorable skeeddaddle for shelter last Summer. The America's Cup has frequently been referred to as emblematic of the championship of the seas, but such performances do not justify any such claim. Then, too, the America's Cup contests have for many years been conducted on handicaps or time allowances which, at best, are merely theoretical. Championships in all other branches of sport have been conducted without any handicaps or allowances.

In this coming race, from off Sandy Hook to off Ostend, the competing craft are liable to encounter all sorts of weather. One day it may be fair with light breezes and the next day there may be a blow with heavy seas. Some of the yachts may do better on smooth seas with light breezes, while others may show their best speed in a blow and a bit of a sea. Thus, to prearrange any handicaps would be to favor one type over another and that is just what King Albert wisely desires to avoid. It will be fair for all—the winner will truly win the title of the champion of the seas.

There are in this country, on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, many yachts eminently suited to such a race. Nor are these necessarily the largest yachts. Past records show that moderately small and even decidedly small sailing craft have made most creditable showings in various off shore races and cruises. It is to be hoped that the owners of these will realize how much their support may do toward helping the sport and will enter their craft in the race which starts on the 4th of next July.

In addition to the many American yachts there are as many more in England, including King George's Britannia. It is quite certain that, were the King to enter her and, if he could not take part in the contest himself, have the Prince of Wales represent him, it would be a great stimulus to the sport. Then there are other yachts owned in France, in Italy, in Spain, in Canada and in various other countries which might make the event really worldwide in its scope were the owners of these yachts to enter and compete in this genuinely big sporting event.

WRESTLING

The doom of the headlock, at least in the newer form given it by Ed (Strangler) Lewis, seems to be written in three events of the last week. The first was the hostile demonstration against Lewis in New York, while the second was a similar outburst in Kansas City. Third, but probably more important, was the declaration of Jack Curley that he would bar the hold in all matches conducted by him in the future.

But even with Curley's pronunciamento, the controversy is still in full cry. It seems to be the old familiar case of the public against the experts. Defending the headlock in more or less emphatic manner are such present-day wrestlers as Wladek Zbyszsco, Earl Caddock and Joe Stecher. Some of the old-timers, among them George Bothner and Dr. Roller, are asking in accents sad if the noble sport of wrestling is to become a parlor amusement, like parchesi and authors. If the headlock is barred, they say, half a dozen other holds will have to pass out with it.

Of course, the public doubtless will win in the long run, which fact Jack Curley showed astuteness in recognizing when he put his ban on the headlock. To accept the inevitable is always wise, and it seems inevitable that the public's indignation against the modern form of the headlock will result in its disappearance from the category of holds.

There is a strangely familiar aspect to the present raging discussion of the headlock. Back in 1906 or so the public decided suddenly that the game of football should be revised and tamed down. But the loyal old guard swore that it would never be. They lined up shoulder to shoulder, a solid phalanx that called on the gods to witness the attempt to emasculate a vigorous, masculine game. "What is the modern generation coming to?" they wailed. "Why, back in the Harvard game of ninety-umph we used to—" and so forth to a familiar end. But the game was materially altered, and to the normal eye it is just as red-blooded and hurly as in the days when an ambulance or two was considered an essential part of the coaching equipment.

After all, there is nothing new in these lamentations about "parlor games." They are the inevitable accompaniment of any endeavor to erase an objectionable feature from a sport. They were heard when the agitation against the strangle hold was in full blast, and not a few old oarsmen are giving vent to them these days over the reduction of the Poughkeepsie distance from four to three miles. But they are only as cries in the wilderness. When a strong-voiced and indignant crowd at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory decides that it does not like the super-headlock of Strangler Lewis, the experts can only wrap their mantles about them and retire to the inner darkness.

TENNIS

It is pleasant to learn that the United States Lawn Tennis Association has decided to extend the international amenities in the sport next Summer to include a visit to France by the American national champions, W. T. Tilden 2d, for men, and Mrs. Molla Bjurstedt Mallory, for women. The more of these events there are the better for the sport and, indirectly, for the strengthening of international friendships in general. The suggestion of the President of the American Association, Mr. Myrick, that France reciprocate by sending her famous feminine star, Mlle. Lenglen, to this country, will undoubtedly receive the most careful attention of the French Association. In addition, there are French players, other than the women's world's champion, whom followers of the sport here would like to see in action.

In André Gobert France has a player of long eminence on the courts, noted for the perfection of his style in the execution of his shots, as well as for a particularly tricky reverse service and marked skill in volleying. He has been more successful in the covered court than in the lawn game, but he is none the less a formidable opponent in the open. He demonstrated this last Summer when he forced both Tilden and Johnston to display their best form to defeat him in the Davis Cup matches. Americans would like to see him in action here, whether he comes as a Davis Cup player or not, and they would also like to make the acquaintance of his partner of last Summer, W. H. Laurentz and of Drugnon and Decugis and others.

It is among the possibilities that the matter of expense may affect the decision of the French Association as to whether or not to send representatives here in exchange for the visit of Tilden and Mrs. Mallory. In his letter to the French Association Mr. Myrick placed considerable emphasis upon that, in his opinion, should be the policy in this respect. He believes the expense of sending teams abroad should in every case be borne by the home association, thus preventing such capitalizing of a player's ability as might come about were the association or club holding the event to pay the visiting competitor's expenses. The policy suggested undoubtedly enables the home association so to control the movements of its representatives as to exercise the most effective guardianship over amateur standards. But such an association as that in France, where the "gates" are much smaller than here, and where the financial resources, consequently, are much less, might consider the idea something of a hardship. However, it is sincerely to be hoped that France will have no difficulty in arranging, not only for the necessary movements of its Davis Cup team, but for a team to compete also in our national championships.

GOLF

Are New York women beginning a move that will make supremacy on the links for their sex a matter of endurance as well as of skill? From one angle such would appear to be the case, judging from action taken at the recent annual meeting of the Women's Metropolitan Golf Association. That meeting, it will be recalled, voted to make the final match for the championship thirty-six holes instead of eighteen as heretofore.

This action was rather unexpected, and the results as shown in this year's championship tournament will be watched with interest. It is the first thirty-six-hole test yet undertaken in a women's tournament in this country to be played in one day. And there can be no doubt but that endurance will prove a big factor in the outcome.

Endurance has long been recognized as an important factor in the two national championships for men, so much so that no matter how good a player may be he has practically no chance for either the amateur or open championship if he enters the tournament without preparation that has included several weeks of steady play.

Capable critics assert that physical exhaustion cost Harry Vardon the American open championship at Toledo last Summer. With only four holes remaining to be played Vardon led the field, and he needed to do nothing extraordinary for a good golfer to finish a winner. But it happened that these holes were such that a premium was paid on extra distance, and there was a counter wind to overcome. He failed, and after he had finished said he couldn't understand how he had lost. It was purely a case of over-taxation physically, and the hard grind under the weight of his fifty-one years offset his masterly skill.

That women golfers will be able to travel the thirty-six holes in one day is not a matter of doubt. They have shown the ability to go such limits and further in other sports, swimming, tennis, and the like, and it is no uncommon thing for some enthusiastic woman golfer to cavort over two rounds of a golf course in a day. But, for all of that, thirty-six holes of golf under the strain of championship finals will prove quite a trying experience, and ere the second round is finished the element of endurance will have become an important factor. In sizing up the chances of the two finalists, keen critics will make due allowances for the advance preparation that the two contestants have made in the way of extended play during the weeks immediately preceding the championship.

BOXING

Seven hundred thousand dollars is a sum which looks to the average man a good deal like the Himalayas. Yet C. F. Graham of Montreal handles it with the insouciance—verbally, at least—with which he might flip a Canadian penny. For this is the sum which it is declared he is willing to produce in order to head the Dempsey-Carpentier bout northward.

The innocent New Yorker—granting that there is a Manhattanite who can properly be described by this adjective—is rather perplexed to know how a city of Montreal's size can yield a purse of this dimension for a sporting event. Those, however, who qualify themselves as experts on what is passing in the minds of Mr. Graham and his confrères declare that the Canadians are of the belief that many thousands of Americans will go to Montreal for two purposes—to witness the fight and to make obeisance at the shrine of Bacchus. It is insisted that Montreal, being but a night away from such centres of population as New York, Boston and Philadelphia, will be decidedly convenient for large masses of thirsty people. Certainly the metropolis of the Dominion is much more suspiciously situated on the map for a big bout than Reno or Carson City, fights at both of which drew well. The firm of Graham and Bacchus looks as if it was at least an even money choice to make the affair a financial winner.

PENN TEAM'S LEAD IS STRENGTHENED

Dartmouth's Defeat Helps the Quaker Basketball Five—Cullen Is Chief Scorer.

Although only one game was played in the Intercollegiate Basketball League during the last week, it furnished probably the greatest upset of the season as far as it has gone, Princeton, which had won only a single game in three contests, defeated the fast-traveling Dartmouth five on the Hanover floor, thus inflicting the second defeat of the year on the Green and putting the latter near the danger limit of three defeats.

As a result of the Hanoverians' downfall the champion Penn team has strengthened its hold on first place. The Red and Blue has won two games and lost none. Dartmouth is second with three triumphs and two setbacks, and Cornell, Princeton and Columbia are tied for third with figures of .500. Cornell and Princeton have won two out of four and Columbia one out of two. Yale trails the procession with three defeats in as many starts. No games will be played this week because of the presence of the dreaded mid-year examinations.

Although his team was defeated, Cullen of Dartmouth took a firmer grip on first place among the individual scorers. The Green man has caged 16 field goals and 28 fouls, for a total of 60. Captain Danny McNichol of Penn is still tied for second with Sidman of Cornell, each having 36 points, 24 behind Cullen. Molinet of Cornell is third with 32, and Legendre of Princeton, who has played only three games, slipped past Johnson of Columbia and now nestles in fourth position. The Tiger has 7 field goals and 13 fouls for a total of 27.

Dartmouth has played one more game than any other team and consequently leads in team scoring, with 120 tallies in five contests. Cornell, which is second with 104, has a better average, however—104 in four contests, an average per game of 26. This is the best mark in the league. Penn still leads on the defensive side. The champions have had only 84 points scored against them in two games. The Red and Blue is in the van as regards number of fouls thrown—32—and Dartmouth's field goal total—45—tops that of all rivals.

The leading scorers and totals by teams follow:

Player.	Games.	Field Goals.	Foul Goals.	Total Points.

DOWNS TO MEET BERNSTEIN.

Semi-Final Game in Snooker Pool Will Be Played Tonight.

The semi-final game in the amateur championship snooker pool tournament, which is being conducted at Doyle's under the auspices of the A. A. B. A., will be played tonight when William Downs and Max Bernstein will cross cues. Each of these players has won four and lost one game in the lower section of the tourney. George La Rue has already won the upper section and will play the winner of tonight's match Tuesday night.

This tournament, which had twelve starters, has proved to be one of the most successful of the A. A. B. A. events of the year. A movement is now on to have the best amateurs in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and this city compete before the present season closes.

The standing of the tourney at Doyle's is as follows:

	Won.	Lost.		Won.	Lost.
G. La Rue	4	0	W. Downs	4	1
G. Barton	3	1	M. Bernstein	4	1

Captures High Scratch Prize at Travers Island Traps With Card of 98.

Harry Sullivan led a field of twenty-six gunners at the traps of the New York Athletic Club yesterday. He won the high scratch prize with a card of 98 out of a possible 100 targets. Sullivan also scored a leg, along with R. L. Spotts, in the race for the Buermeyer prize. Each gunner had a full score of 50 targets. The high handicap prize went to H. J. Thielman, after a shoot-off against a half dozen other gunners.

The Travers Island gunners brought to an end all their January events. In the shoot for the Lyon Cup, the final winner proved to be G. T. Hodges with three legs. The same number of legs gave E. M. Alexander the Byronel Cup for January. F. W. Finch won both the President and the Tournament Cups. In each he had two legs during the month. The Distance Handicap went to F. A. Siebert with two legs during the month.

The Buermeyer Cup, a shoot at 50 targets scratch, also came to an end yesterday. The trophy is a three-month cup, extending over November, December and January. The winner was Ben S. Donnelley, the former Chicago nimrod, who has been shooting well at Travers Island this year. He took the event with three legs during the months.

Investment Opportunities

Industrial depressions are accompanied by increased demand for seasoned investments, such as have the attributes of safety, good yield and marketability. Prices are still low, but should discount easier money conditions.

Paris Conference and Foreign Exchange — Situation of General Trade and Money Rates.

The action of the allied Premiers in the matter of German reparations and financial aid to Austria explains last week's advancing foreign exchange market and makes the question of this week's movement of rates extremely interesting. It is at least conceivable that agreement on the new Paris program, ratified by the Governments, would eventually introduce a new situation both in international finance and in the international investment market. Meantime, the statement of our own Federal Reserve system as a whole shows the average ratio of reserve to have risen last week from 48½ per cent. to 49; the second figure being the highest since Oct. 10, 1919, and 4½ per cent. above that of a year ago. Not only were rediscounts cut down, but the week's $24,600,000 reduction of outstanding notes left the total smaller by $314,000,000, or 9¼ per cent., than the December maximum of five weeks ago. Nevertheless, even this contraction leaves both notes and rediscounts well above where they stood in this week of 1920.

A season as distinctive as the first month or two of a new year is likely to be remembered for some single outstanding financial movement. Last January it was the uninterrupted tightening of money rates, accompanied by falling bank reserves and rapid depreciation in foreign exchange. This January the foreign exchange market has moved in the opposite direction, and for a short time after New Year's Day the course of money rates and bank reserves seemed to make the contrast with 1920 uniform and logical.

But the money market and the reserve ratio have not continued on that course. Three and six months Wall Street loans on negotiable security fell from the 7½ per cent. rate of December to 6 early in the present month; this week the rate was back again above 7. The New York Federal Reserve Bank's ratio of reserve advanced 1½ per cent. in the second week of the month, but declined 2¼ per cent. in the third and hardly changed in the fourth. What, then, is the trouble?

One reasonable inference is that the banks are still carrying a great mass of idle and unproductive accounts which clog the machinery of credit. The fact, in itself reassuring, that the predicted succession of serious business insolvencies was averted has meant that mercantile, industrial and agricultural customers who were crippled by the reverses of 1920 are still being protected by their banks pending an opportunity to realize on their assets or to resume their work in profitable trade.

Granting some sort of business revival, they will be able to stand on their own feet again and the tied-up bank credit will be released. But even so, we have to allow also for the extent to which American bank resources are still engaged, first in the financing of foreign trade when the country's huge surplus of exports over imports is not offset by equivalent import of gold or sale of foreign securities to American investors, and, second, in the direct subscription by the banks to their share of the Government's continuing short-term loans. The existence of these three burdens, carried over from 1920, doubtless explains why, notwithstanding the immense release of credit through the fall in prices and the collapse of speculation, rediscounts of the Federal Reserve are even now greater by $282,000,000 than a year ago. It also explains the slowness of money rates to recede from the high level of last year.

In due course, as the commercial and industrial situation is straightened out, the money rate will unquestionably decline. Its return to normal will help the work of financing Europe's recuperation with American capital; but, so far as regards the situation of home industry, easier money will have to be regarded rather as a consequence of reaction than as a cause for revival. One distinctive economic movement which is likely always hereafter to be associated with the beginning of 1921 is the lowering of wages. It is a movement which was not predicted by any one until a very short time ago, yet which has never heretofore been escaped in a severe trade reaction and which is undeniably as logical in the present sequence of events as was the great fall in wholesale prices which preceded it.

The cost of labor was advanced after the armistice as violently and with as little consideration for the future as was the cost of necessaries. Wages were put up partly because living expenses had risen, but much more specifically because organized labor was able to demand what industrial enterprise either did not dare to refuse or else granted readily because of the belief that an increased labor cost could be added to prices of goods and passed along to the consuming public. We now know that the orgie of extortionate prices is definitely ended, but we do not know how the matter is to end with labor. Undoubtedly at present prices of goods, the only alternative of many industries is reduced production with much smaller labor forces or continuance of output at reduced labor costs.

The consumer's attitude being what it is, there could be no other result even if Government were operating the industries. But it is yet to be tested how labor itself will act in the matter. Organized labor has taken its stand, and not altogether unreasonably, on one point, namely, that wages ought not to come down unless retail prices and the plain man's cost of living come down equivalently. That aspect of the problem is still to be settled—with the retail food merchants first, but probably with the rent exploiters afterward.

London's Impression as to the Forces Behind the Movement of Sterling and Francs.

HIGH-GRADE BONDS ADVANCE

Uncertainties of the British Export Trade and the Reduction of the Paper Currency.

Copyright, 1921, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—While it is difficult for London to forecast the future course of sterling at New York, the opinion prevails here that the rise is not yet over, although the $4 level is in any case not likely to be much exceeded. The Paris conference has been responsible for the abnormal fluctuations of the Continental exchanges. The long rise in value of the franc on the London market is still generally attributed to the firm attitude adopted by the new French Government concerning German reparations, and the last week's reaction was a result of heavy unloading of speculative holdings acquired when the rate first commenced to fall. After this reaction shall have run its course a further rise in the sterling value of the franc is not unlikely, especially in view of the possibility of a new French loan being offered in America.

Notwithstanding the reported compromise at Paris in regard to the German reparations payment, the question as to the form which the German indemnities should take bristles with difficulties. London bankers are still chary of expressing opinion regarding the settlement. It is known that only a relatively small amount of gold can be obtained from Germany, and it is still feared that if she can pay only in manufactured goods, the countries receiving them would suffer from such abnormal competition and that increasing unemployment would follow.

This feeling causes some difference of view regarding the movement of German exchange on London in favor of Berlin during the Paris conference. The sterling value of other Central European currencies has also risen since the conference assembled. On the London market, German marks are now quoted 221 for the pound sterling, against 227 a week ago; Austrian kronen 1,250, against 1,900; Polish marks 2,500, against 3,200; Czechoslovakian kronen 278, against 283; Jugoslavian currency 138, against 135.

Rise in London's Investment Market.

Next to the foreign exchange movement, the striking feature since the turn of the year has been the strength of British Government stocks. To some extent this is due to a demand arising from the stagnation of trade and the consequent flow of idle money into safe and readily realizable securities. But it is after all mainly a result of confident belief that cheaper money is coming shortly in the London market. Moreover, the net yield of high-grade securities to investors at present prices is extremely attractive, and it will naturally appear more so if the general level of money is reduced by a fall in the bank rate.

The unfortunate experience of investors in many recently issued industrial securities is also causing them to change the character of their investments. The offsetting consideration in the matter of investment values is that the rise in the gilt-edged stocks will lead to the issue of numerous high-class loans in the immediate future. Several are already being prepared, and the market is already showing some signs of weakness.

Influences Back of the Sterling Market.

Aside from such influence as the Paris conference may have exerted, numerous reasons are assigned for the steady advance in sterling at New York, which in this market is attracting much favorable comment, though it is following the course long predicted in well-informed financial quarters. In the first place, it should be observed that the financing of European imports of American produce at the close of last year has already been arranged, and that the demand for dollar remittances on continental account has, therefore, to a considerable extent, subsided. In particular the French demand for American remittances, which was so largely responsible for the fall in sterling a few weeks ago, is no longer pressing.

Requirements of other continental countries have also been more or less satisfied. These important commitments, which were settled as usual through London, having been arranged, the depressing influence on sterling is, to a considerable extent, removed. A minor but not unimportant influence in the movement of exchange in England's favor is the resumption on a considerable scale of gold shipments from London to New York. Meanwhile a sentimental influence continues to be exerted by the flotation of European loans in the American money market. Necessarily, the mere fact of the raising of such credits in America tends to reduce the pressure on exchange.

Reaction in Foreign Trade.

It is not primarily a matter of actual trade movements; for in many branches of Great Britain's export trade business appears to be steadily declining, and the present outlook is far from good. The divergence of British currency from gold parity and the influence of that disparity on prices on the Exchanges are checking foreign demands, while in the markets of many countries to which England sells there is still serious congestion of goods waiting to be disposed of before fresh orders can be placed. Merchants and shippers are unpleasantly occupied with requests from customers abroad for cancellation of orders or for further extension of credit, and meantime foreign competition is increasing. The situation would be improved if a comprehensive scheme for granting credits to distressed European countries were to be set in motion and if foreign exchange were to move further toward

CENTRAL UNION TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, TRUSTEE

The following information is summarized from a letter to us from Mr. R. E. Breed, President of The Ohio Power Company and of the American Gas and Electric Company.

The Company—The Ohio Power Company owns and operates large electric light and power generating and distributing systems in important manufacturing sections of Ohio, with over 1152 miles of transmission and distributing lines and serving the cities of Canton, Newark, Steubenville and the Ohio River district near Wheeling, W. Va., and over 45 cities and towns in the State. The company's main power station is at Windsor on the Ohio River near Wheeling, W. Va. This is one of the three largest steam generating turbine plants in the United States and has its own coal mines adjacent to the plant.

Earnings Twice Interest—In the last two years to December 31 gross earnings and net income after taxes, maintenance and depreciation have been as follows:

	1920	1919
Gross Earnings	$7,695,842	$5,496,765
Net Income	2,477,466	1,920,694

Annual bond interest charges accruing, on completion of the present financing, will be $1,236,875, net income being more than twice this charge last year.

Property Values—The First and Refunding Bonds will be secured by a direct mortgage lien on the entire property of the company, conservatively appraised at over $25,000,000. They are secured by first lien on part of this property and on the balance are subject to only $2,617,500 prior liens outstanding under closed mortgages.

Outstanding Bonds—On completion of this financing, $15,800,000 First and Refunding Mortgage Bnods will be outstanding.

Sinking Fund—The mortgage provides for an annual sinking fund, beginning January 1, 1924, of 1½% of the Series "A" First and Refunding Mortgage Bonds outstanding each year, up to and including January 1, 1936, and thereafter of 2% per annum to maturity. This sinking fund is to be used to purchase bonds in the market if obtainable at or under par. If not so obtainable the unexpended balance reverts to the renewal and improvement fund.

We offer these bonds when, as and if issued and subject to approval of legality by counsel. Interim Receipts of Dillon, Read & Co. or Temporary Bonds exchangeable for definitive Bonds when received will be deliverable about February 15.

We are offering

A Twenty-Year Bond Yielding 8%

Available in $100, $500, and $1,000 Amounts

The issuing Company serves electricity for light and power—necessities of vital importance—to one of the largest and most important cities in the Middle West. Total population served approximately 450,000.

The Bonds are mortgage secured on the Company's properties, the total value of which, as fixed by State Public Service Commission for rate-making purposes, exceeds $22,400,000, compared with the total bonded debt of $14,755,500. The security includes a direct first mortgage lien on the new generating station, one of the most modern in the country.

Net earnings in 1920, which did not reflect full benefit of rate increases obtained during the year, or of economies resulting from new generating station, were at the rate of approximately twice all bond interest requirements.

The purchase of these bonds will provide you with a safe investment yielding 8% over a long period of years—years when the prevailing interest rate will undoubtedly be much lower.

SPURTS OF LIFE IN STEEL MILLS

Even Some Independents Are Reopening Plants for Work on Old Contracts.

SETTLING DOWN OF PRICES

Sheets and Tin Plate Show Better Tone, but Nuts and Bolts Are 50 Per Cent. Off the High.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 29.—The Carnegie Steel Company has just blown in another blast furnace of the Carrie group at Rankin, and now has forty-eight in blast, the largest for many months. The additional pig iron was needed at the Homestead steel works, which have been drawing hot metal from the Edgar Thomson furnaces. The Carnegie company is still producing steel ingots at about 96 per cent. of capacity, a higher rate than at any time between March and November of last year. The National Tube Company is operating practically 100 per cent. in point of output. Other subsidiaries of the Steel Corporation are operating at various rates slightly lower. This week independent steel mill operations, on the whole, are increased; several plants have resumed in part.

Prices in the main seem to be well maintained, though this does not mean much, since inquiry is light and the individual orders available are hardly enough to encourage deep price cutting. The steel market in general is quotable as follows: Bars, $2.35; shapes, $2.45; plates, $2.65; wire, $3.25; nails, $3.25; pipe, 57½ per cent. basing discount; blue annealed sheets, $3.55; black sheets, $4.35; galvanized sheets, $5.70; hoops, $3.05; tin plate, $7. The recognized market quotation on foundry pig iron at valley furnaces has declined $1.50 to $30, valley furnace. Bessemer and basic remain quotable at $32 and $30, valley, respectively. The Southern pig iron market, quoted nominally for some time at $32, Birmingham, yielded when the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company was about to buy 2,000 tons, for delivery up to April 1 to the company's plant at Louisville, Ky., at $27.50, Birmingham.

United States Steel's Quarterly Report.

The United States Steel Corporation's earnings report for the fourth quarter was issued on Tuesday. There was a slight decline in earnings from the third quarter, but those had been swelled by the invoicing of a great deal of steel made in the second quarter but not shipped, on account of car shortage, until after July 1. The December earnings were lower than those in October and November, this reflecting the close of the lake navigation season. In 1919 the December earnings showed an increase, due to the fact that September and October earnings had been affected by the strike.

The corporation showed earnings for the year of $177,000,000, or 10 per cent. more than in the best year prior to the war—that, too, after a large deduction for Federal taxes had been made. On account of various difficulties the corporation's production in 1920 averaged only about 82 per cent. of capacity, while in the past large earnings were never made unless operations were at well above 85 per cent. The corporation was handicapped by the fact that while it did not advance prices in 1920, its costs mounted through the influence of the independents advancing their prices and allowing their costs to mount.

The rivet manufacturers have reduced their regular asking price $5 a ton, to 4.00c for buttonhead structural rivets and 4.10c for conehead boiler rivets, some shipments being made on old contracts. There does not appear to be any effort to adjust the rivet market to the new prices all around, but rather is simply drifting downward with declines from time to time. Three raw materials are involved in the making of rivets—bars, rods and wire—and the makers say it is difficult for them to make price comparisons. Before the war 2.25c was considered a good price for rivets while bars sold at 1.40c, giving a 57 per cent. spread. The second war control price of rivets was 4.40c, with bars at 2.90c, making a 52 per cent. spread. Now at 4.00c rivets are 70 per cent. above bars at 2.35c, while a 53 per cent. spread would make rivets 3.57c.

With the regular mills offering skelp at 2.40c for grooved, 2.55c for universal and 2.65c for sheared, the market has been clarified, as the 2.65c price on sheared skelp compares with the 2.65c for plates, this being in line with the war-control schedule, which also showed the same price for the same commodities, 3.25c. The universal mill skelp is likewise in line with the war control, which put it at $2 a ton under plates or sheared skelp. However, under the war control grooved skelp was out at the same price as merchant bars, 2.90c. The present quotation of 2.45c, $2 a ton above bars, is a reflection of the Industrial Board readjustment, which put bars, shapes, plates, &c., down $7 a ton, but grooved skelp down only $5, thus establishing a $2 differential.

Tin Plate Picking Up.

Demand for tin plate seems to be picking up somewhat, although rather slowly. This week the McKeesport Tin Plate Company operated twenty-four of its forty-four mills, an increase of four over last week, while the Weirton Steel Company has put its Weirton plant, twenty-six mills, into full operation, where a few weeks ago less than half the plant was in operation. The leading interest—American Sheet and Tin Plate Company—continues to operate slightly over 80 per cent. of its mills—on specifications against contract tonnage held over from last year. While some new business is being received it is scheduled for future rolling, chiefly in March or later. The tin plate market appears to be absolutely firm at the regular price of $7 on production plate. Stocks in second hands are in limited demand on account of the sizes being fixed.

Several of the nut and bolt manufacturers this week announced discounts representing reductions of about 20 per cent. from the reduced prices made December 1, the reduction at that time having also been about 20 per cent. The new prices are regarded as being rather close in relation to present mill prices on bars and rods. A few of the new prices of bolts are less than one-half the prices regularly maintained at the top a few months ago, and the general average of the decline is approximately 50 per cent.

The sheet market has reflected a better tone among buyers during the past week, at least in the Eastern territory. As an illustration, the leading interest received from New England and other Eastern points several releases as to shipments on old contracts. Some of these releases have come from jobbing interests, and it may be inferred that this indicates a better distribution of sheets to consumers. There is some new buying and, while the volume of business is distinctly moderate, it is actual business, and the orders bear evidence of representing actual consumptive requirements. Sheet prices are being very well maintained. There may be some shading, but it is the exception and maintenance of full prices the rule.

Labor More Efficient.

While sheet mill operations by the independents are at a very low rate, probably at not over one-fourth, as a whole, it can hardly be said that they are decreasing, and there are some instances of mills resuming operations in part after a complete idleness, during which orders or releases were allowed to accumulate. The independent manufacturers are making every effort to reduce costs, but in most cases the reductions are simply by way of cutting off items that can be eliminated, and by securing a greater labor efficiency. It is known that there has been a distinct improvement in human performance since the new year set in, while there have been very few direct reductions in wages. One sheet mill in Pennsylvania has offered its men reduced wages with a promise that if the offer is accepted a special effort will be made to secure orders to provide employment.

As to tonnage rates at independent mills, the last settlement with the Amalgamated Association showed, for the November-December shipments, an average of 5.15, which controls wages for this month and next. The preceding period had shown 5.80, so that there is a reduction of thirteen notches, each notch being 1½ per cent. of the basic rates in the scale. This means that wages this month and next are 90 per cent. above base, instead of 100½ per cent. above, as in November and December. The tonnage wage cost is thus reduced by a trifle over $2 per net ton, or 10 cents per 100 pounds. The last settlement is the lowest since the one that set wages for May and June of last year.

The leading interest continues its high rate of operation, having an average of well above 90 per cent. of its sheet mills in operation, and new business is being taken which fills in the small gaps. Some business received this week has been scheduled for March.

Coke Not at the Bottom Yet.

Unless all signs fail, and the opinions in the coke trade are very much at fault, the bottom of the coke slump has not yet been reached, at least not in respect to merchant production. Producers have virtually ceased their efforts to maintain even the semblance of a market, and buyers are displaying a like disinclination. Coke classed as heating, because of no demand for other grades, has sold down to $5, which figure is generally quoted as the spot furnace market. Contract coke stands at $8. Foundry holds to $6.50@$7 for spot, and $6.75@$10 for contract. By reason of the blowing out of additional blast furnaces there have been further suspensions in shipments of furnace coke this week. The total coke production in the Connellsville region last week was 170,060 tons, as against 170,180 tons the previous week and 239,606 tons during the same week last year. In the first four weeks of this year there was a falling off in coke production from the same period last year of 187,276 tons.

It has been learned this week that the Pittsburgh Coal Company has reduced its coal prices, the reduction in general being 25 cents on the gas coal and 50 cents on steam coal, while there is a change in differentials. The new prices are now $4 per ton on screened coal and $3.75 on mine-run, slack, &c.

RAIL DISPUTES SETTLED.

R. V. Massey Tells of Work of Pennsylvania's Reviewing Board.

R. V. Massey, Chairman of the newly organized Joint Reviewing Committee of the Pennsylvania Railroad, announced yesterday that the committee had begun its work of adjusting differences between the management of the railroad and engine and train service employes.

"Thus far," said Mr. Massey, "we have successfully settled several controversies. One of these cases had been pending since 1914. All were adjusted in accordance with our committee's rule requiring not less than a two-thirds vote for the final determination of any matter.

"We have adopted an interesting rule to emphasize the fact that the Joint Reviewing Committee is a united nonpartisan body and not a mere conference between representatives of opposing sides. At all meetings no two representatives of the management or of the employes shall be seated together; they shall be alternated around the table.

"I am confident that there is not one of us who has the slightest doubt of the ability of this body to adjust on a fair and friendly basis any differences which may arise."

FINANCIAL STATEMENT STATE OF FLORIDA

Assessed Value for year 1920 ..... $409,583,938
Bonded Debt, exclusive of Drainage District Bonds ..... None
Population (1920 census) 966,296

This issue of bonds is an indirect obligation of the State of Florida as the State is not only obligated by law to pay the annual drainage taxes expressly levied on all lands owned by the State of Florida within this District but in case the drainage taxes on any other lands in the District are not paid, the title thereto automatically becomes vested in the State of Florida in the absence of other bidders at delinquent tax sale and the State is thereafter obligated to pay the drainage taxes on these lands the same as on all other lands owned by the State within said District so that in effect the State of Florida guarantees the payment of all drainage taxes, and the bonds payable from said taxes.

The State of Florida owns approximately 1,250,000 acres of land within this District valued at over $40,000,000 upon which drainage taxes are expressly levied under the Statute authorizing these bonds. The District embraces 4,927,759 acres in Southern Florida, including over 90% of the three important Counties of Palm Beach, Dade and Broward and a large portion of the five Counties of Monroe, Lee, De Soto, Okeechobee and St. Lucie. The total amount of Everglades District bonds outstanding, including this issue is $4,500,000. These bonds are not only an indirect obligation of the State of Florida, but are also a direct and general obligation of said District.

These bonds are signed by the Governor, State Treasurer, State Comptroller, Attorney General, and Commissioner of Agriculture. The management and control of said District are vested in these State Officials as the Board of Commissioners of Everglades Drainage District.

These bonds have been validated by the Supreme Court of Florida. Each bond has endorsed thereon the approving opinion of the Attorney General of Florida which under the law makes these bonds incontestable for any reason except on the ground of forgery.

These bonds are receivable by the State Treasurer to secure State Deposits.

THE EQUITABLE TRUST CO. OF NEW YORK, TRUSTEE

We summarize as follows from a letter dated January 29, 1921, from Mr. J. W. Van Dyke, President of the Company:

Security: Sole funded debt consists of this issue and $61,000 of mortgages. Preliminary balance sheet of December 31, 1920, after allowance for proceeds of this issue, shows net assets in excess of $110,900,000. An appraisal made in 1919 by Messrs. Ford, Bacon & Davis indicates a value $25,000,000 greater, making the total valuation $135,900,000.

Net Earnings: These have been reported as follows:

Year	Before Deducting Federal Taxes	After Deducting Federal Taxes
1916	$9,828,000	$9,628,000
1917	12,931,000	9,006,000
1918	19,610,000	7,410,000
1919	13,623,000	*11,026,000
1920 (Partially estimated)	15,328,000	11,047,000

*Final figures after adjustment of Federal Taxes.

Net earnings before taxes in the five years ended December 31, 1920 averaged nearly 15 times annual interest on these debentures and the $61,000 of other funded debt.

Restrictions: No subsequent funded obligations can be issued which shall have priority over these debentures, nor can the total of all funded debt exceed 50% of net assets. The Company reserves the right to issue obligations secured on marine or other transportation plant and equipment (acquired subsequent to the date of issue of these debentures) for all or part of the purchase price of such equipment and on real estate in Philadelphia acquired as a site for an office building owned by it.

Sinking Fund: Commencing March 1, 1922, $500,000 per annum shall be paid into a sinking fund for purchases of these debentures at not over par and interest. If a sufficient amount of them cannot be purchased in the succeeding four months to exhaust the fund the unexpended balance reverts to the general funds of the Company.

Business: Organized in 1870, the Company until 1911—date of dissolution—was a constituent part of the Standard Oil Company. It owns modern refineries at Philadelphia, Franklin and Pittsburgh, Pa. and Brunswick, Ga.

This issue of debentures is offered subject to the authorization thereof by the stockholders of the Company. The legal proceedings will be passed upon by Messrs. Brown & Williams, Philadelphia, counsel for the Company and our counsel Messrs. McAdoo, Cotten & Franklin, New York.

Delivery between February 10th and 14th, 1921 in the form of temporary certificates of the Company discounted at the rate of 6½% per annum to March 1, 1921 and exchangeable thereafter for the definitive bonds.

IS CAPITAL INCREASE TAXABLE?

A recent decision of the Federal District Court in Connecticut disputes the verdict of the Revenue Department that profits from investments, realized by a non-trader, are income. This point is discussed in The Annalist (out today). Ten cents a copy; $5.00 a year by mail.

IMPROVED CREDIT CONDITIONS SHOWN

Reflected in Lower Rates at Which Treasury Sells Certificates of Indebtedness.

FUNDS FLOW OUT OF CITY

Usual Flow of Year Movement is Reversed — Nearly $300,000,000 Withdrawn From Banks Here.

Improved credit conditions throughout the country as a whole in the latter part of December and the first part of January have been reflected in the lower rates at which the Treasury was able to sell its certificates of indebtedness, according to the Monthly Review of Business just issued by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. The Review, in commenting on the movement of funds recently, says:

"Among the New York City banks the movement of funds since Jan. 1 has not been in accordance with what would have been considered normal prior to the European war. Then, after the turn of the year, funds usually returned to New York City in large volume. This January, however, just the reverse has been true. During January, up to the 24th, the principal New York City banks have lost nearly $300,000,000 in deposits, of which $44,000,000 represents withdrawals by out-of-town bank correspondents. This loss of deposits has necessitated, of course, a heavy drain of gold from this district to other Federal Reserve districts and has led very recently to increased borrowing by the New York banks at the Federal Reserve Bank."

The Review states that aggregate deposits of thirty-seven of the largest savings banks in New York State increased 10 per cent. between Jan. 10, 1920, and the corresponding date this year, which is a ratio slightly greater than the gain reported for the year 1919 and nearly four times as great as the rate of increase during 1918. The list of thirty-seven banks represents more than 63 per cent. of the savings bank resources in New York State. The Review also draws attention to the fact that deposit increases have been most noticeable in banks where a considerable proportion of the depositors are manual workers. On the cost of living the Review says in part:

"Wholesale prices have consistently moved ahead of the cost of living. They reached a point two and one-half times as high as in 1914, while the cost of living reached a point only about twice as high. The drop thus far in wholesale prices has also been much greater and more rapid.

"Reports received by the National Industrial Conference Board show a decrease of 8 per cent. in the price of food, and a 9 per cent. decrease in the cost of clothing during the month of December. Shelter, fuel and light, and sundries show no change."

Disposing of War Material.

One of the difficulties confronting large British manufacturing companies is indicated by the statement of the Chairman at the shareholders' meeting of Vickers, Limited, in Sheffield a few weeks ago, in which it was stated that "the question of the eventual disposal of armor plate and gun plant has been a source of anxiety. The Japanese orders have cleared the situation for the time, but it is plain that the company cannot carry indefinitely a charge which ought to be met by the country."

COMMODITY PRICES

Downward Movement Prevalent in the Past Week—Most Articles Reach Month's Lowest.

Declines were largely in the majority in last week's wholesale prices of staple commodities. Of the eighteen typical articles in the subjoined list, thirteen ended the week at lower prices, the declines in food, metals, cotton and cotton goods being in many cases considerable. Only four articles—wheat, flour, pork and coffee—advanced, and only steel remained at an unchanged price. Six commodities in the list sold during last week at the lowest price of 1921 to date, three at the highest.

Following are the cash prices for the principal commodities in the wholesale market at the close of business last week, a week before, and a year ago:

Our Imports of Art Works.

In the eleven months ending with November, the United States imported paintings, statuary and other works of art to the aggregate value of $25,782,842, as against $17,579,291 in the same eleven months of 1919 and $6,730,650 in 1918. The importation, contrary to general belief, was not as great as in the year or two before the war. During the same eleven months of 1913, our imports of such articles amounted to $29,273,841 and in 1912 to $53,286,218.

DENMARK

Denmark unconditionally guarantees this loan as to principal and interest by endorsement on each bond.

The credit of Denmark ranks high with the most important nations of the world.

In the twenty years preceding the war the Danish government borrowed abroad at rates from 3 to 4%.

The average yield of three government issues listed in Copenhagen was 6.28 on December 30, 1920.

The wealth of Denmark, as officially estimated before the war, is nine times the debt of December 31, 1920.

The debt is one of the lowest among European nations, being but $90 per capita.

Government owned property, largely revenue producing, is valued at $309,139,000, which is more than the total debt of Denmark.

The soundness of Denmark's fiscal policy is shown by the surplus of $16,438,000 of ordinary revenues over ordinary expenses for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1920.

Denmark ranks equally with Holland in shipping tonnage per capita and is exceeded only by Norway and Great Britian.

Danish Consolidated Municipal Loan

Twenty-five Year 8% Sinking Fund External Gold Bonds

Unconditionally Guaranteed by the

as to principal, interest and sinking fund by endorsement on each bond

Interest dates Feb. 1 and Aug. 1. Due February 1, 1946

Sinking Fund sufficient to purchase or redeem entire issue at or before maturity. Redeemable only at 107½%.

Payable in time of war as in time of peace, in United States gold coin, at The National City Bank of New York, without deduction for any Danish taxes: Denominations $500 and $1000

This issue will be divided into two series. Series "A", $7,000,000 principal amount, will be the joint and several obligations of 27 Danish municipalities embracing nearly all the chief municipalities in Denmark outside of Copenhagen and the adjoining municipality, Frederiksberg. Series "B", $8,000,000 principal amount, will be the joint and several obligation of Copenhagen and Frederiksberg.

The 29 municipalities comprise about 80% of the urban, and about one-third of the total population of Denmark. Copenhagen has a population of about 569,000 and, with its extensive Free Port, is one of the most important trade centers of northern continental Europe.

The municipal law of Denmark provides for control by the Danish Government over the financial policies of municipalities. The sanction of the Minister of Interior must be obtained prior to incurring funded indebtedness by any Danish municipality. Under this supervision, municipal finances in Denmark have been conducted on a conservative basis, and, as a result, the credit of the Danish municipalities is well established and highly regarded.

Price 98 and Interest, to Yield about 8.29% to Maturity

Tax Exempt in California

Issuance authorized by the Railroad Commission of the State of California

The Company agrees to pay interest without deduction for any Normal Federal Income Tax up to 4%, which it may lawfully pay at the source. Under the present law the Company will pay the 2% tax deductible at the source.

The following information is taken from official sources:

The Southern California Edison Company supplies electric light and power to over 150 cities and towns, including Los Angeles, serving an area of 55,000 square miles and a population of over 1,300,000. The generating plants operated by the Company have a total installed capacity of 311,800 horse power, of which 176,000 is derived from water power.

Both the gross and net earnings of the Company are more than four times those of ten years ago. For the year ended December 31, 1920, gross earnings were $14,648,000; net earnings were $8,249,000, or more than 2½ times the annual mortgage bond interest charges of $3,294,630.

The Company has paid dividends on its common stock since 1910, the present basis being 8 per cent.

We recommend these bonds for investment and shall be pleased to send on request a circular describing the issue in detail.

WESTERN BUSINESS SLIGHTLY BETTER

Wide Interest in the Controversy Over Reduction of Railway Wages.

WHEAT SITUATION PUZZLING

Grain Markets Believe in Lower Prices, Despite Prospective Rapid Depletion of Available Supplies.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—When everything is considered, retail business in this territory is surprisingly good; one of the main factors, perhaps, being that there is less unemployment here than in other sections of the country. The leading wholesalers report the dry goods trade as fairly active. More buyers were here during the last week than in the same week last year, but they are taking merchandise in a conservative manner. So far as the total volume of business is concerned, that naturally shows a decrease from last year on account of the much lower prices. In the steel trade, whose situation is little changed from recent weeks, the independent mills are operating at 30 per cent. of capacity or less, while the United States Steel plants are averaging 85 to 90 per cent.

The big factor in the business situation at the present time is here believed to be the railroad wage controversy. The belief is very general that wages in this industry should be readjusted to those prevailing elsewhere. It is felt that freight and passenger rates are now as high as the traffic can bear, and that, with a marked reduction in the cost of living, some readjustment in wages is not only fair but necessary if the railroads are to make even a small profit. There is also a belief that sooner or later freight rates will have to be lowered. Based on the closing prices at Chicago and a freight rate of 45 cents per 100 pounds, farmers around Hastings and Columbus, Nebraska, could hardly be paid more than 30 cents a bushel for corn and around 25 cents per bushel for oats, or far below the cost of production in pre-war days.

While grains were on the down grade the greater part of the last week, net losses were not severe when all surrounding influences are allowed for. At the last, wheat was off 4 to 7 cents, corn 1⅜ to 2⅝ cents and oats 1⅞ to 2⅜ cents, as compared with the finish the previous week, with final trades about at the bottom. Corn and oats both sold at new low figures for this crop and at the lowest since 1916, while May wheat also established a new low for the period. Were it not for the depressing economic and financial conditions, however, the trade believes that it would be a simple matter to start a bull market in wheat, because all figures now point to the fact that the United States is practically on a "domestic basis," regardless of whether any more wheat is to be sold abroad or not. Under any conditions, there will be no burdensome stock at the end of the crop year.

Those in a position to know say that short selling of wheat around the present level should be discouraged, for, while prices may work somewhat lower, the reactions are likely to be very violent, since liquidation in futures has been thorough, and there is a large outstanding short interest. Should anything happen to stampede the public into buying flour there would be a quick reflection in the price of wheat, and attention is frequently called to the fact that despite all the depressing influences, cash grain is selling at a good premium over the futures in every market. The general run of sentiment, however, is radically bearish, with more traders looking for $1.25 for May wheat than are looking for $1.75.

In some quarters it is said that the Department of Agriculture's figures on reserves as of Jan. 1 are 100,000,000 bushels too low; but if this is the case, the estimate of 417,000,000 bushels for a year ago is likewise that much too low if not more so. Under any circumstances this country has much less wheat available than it had last year, not only because of the smaller crop but on account of a round 15,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat being included in domestic stocks on Jan. 1. Including the amount of domestic wheat already exported or sold to go out, it is figured that exports from Jan. 1 to July 1 will certainly exceed 70,000,000 bushels, which compares with 102,000,000 bushels during the same period last year.

Coarse grains are regarded in a decidedly weak position; but everything in their situation has so long been radically bearish that it would not be surprising to see a sharp rally after a further decline. The big run of corn is regarded as over for the time being.

Our Exports by Districts.

In view of the persistent belief of the New York exporting community during the past few months that the country's export trade was decreasing, and of the fact that the actual figures have shown not a decrease but an increase, the government's classification of export trade by customs districts is interesting. During the eleven months ending with November, as lately reported by the Department of Commerce, exports from the New York customs district decreased from $3,251,673,950 in 1919 to $2,939,783,726 in 1920, whereas exports for the same period from customs districts on the Gulf of Mexico increased from $1,064,847,490 to $1,510,327,335; and in districts on the Canadian border from $740,868,000 to $981,461,583.

AN INVESTMENT MESSAGE

A Bit of History, the Lesson of Which Is

Trade Your Inflated Dollars Into Deflated Investment Securities

You have heard a lot about the depreciated value of money. We are apt to judge money solely by what it will buy. Let's judge it by what it will rent for,—in other words, by what it will earn. There never was a time, except during short panics, when the rental value of money was so high. If you try to rent money you either get it now as a favor or you pay twice as much as you paid in pre-war days.

If it has been so cheap, why has it been so hard to get? And why has it commanded such high interest rates? Speaking in a general way, and up to only a few days ago, the commercial banks would loan money only to their own customers—and even their own customers were put on strict rations. Things have improved somewhat, but money, real money, in the financial world is still king. No matter how little its purchasing power may have been, or still is, in the commodity markets, it never before has had such a high purchasing power in the Investment Markets.

On December 29th we first published this investment message:

> "Perhaps never again will there be such bargains in investment securities as the market now offers, and so we say to all, and this means you, scrape together all the money you can without borrowing and buy investment securities — and buy them now."

We have published it many times since. If you have not heeded it yet, you should do so now.

Trace back every widespread disturbance in the financial markets, going back if you like as far as authentic financial history goes, and see if you are not impressed with three facts—the first being that a long period of abnormal interest rates is bound to produce a period of sub-normal interest rates. The second fact which will impress you is the rapidity with which money rates go from abnormal to normal, or even to sub-normal. It is first the call money rates that go down and then the time money rates. Watch and see how long it will be before call money will be loaning on Wall Street at 3% or less.

The third, and the most important, fact which will impress you is the high market values reached by investment securities after such a period as we have just passed through.

There is nothing in history which entirely parallels our present situation, but many preceding periods throw light on many features of it. More can probably be learned from the period between 1890 and 1900 than any similar period. Over confidence in speculation had been developing preceding this period—which did not run its usual course for the unexpected reason that relatively small troubles in small and remote communities brought here and there strains in some of the big English banking houses. In the fall of 1890 it became known that the great banking house of Baring Brothers was in trouble. Few of the younger men of this generation know now or would even be able to comprehend the standing and influence of this house at that time. Time and time again they had tided whole nations over during a period of financial stress. In fact, it was their effort to tide over the Argentine situation which brought on their troubles. Taking the world over, from the summer of 1890 to the end of 1893 it was a series of troubles. Our own panic, which ended in a financial collapse, came during the summer of 1893.

While money was being sought in this country at any price which would command it, the rates in England were rapidly dropping. In spite of the vast sums which we took from the private investors in England, the Bank of England's discount rate was gradually reduced to 2½%, and on February 22nd, 1894, it was reduced from 2½% to 2%, and remained at 2% until September 10th, 1896, when it was again advanced to 2½%. But even at that the 2% rate was nominal. During this period it was not unusual for obligations to be discounted by the commercial banks of London at a rate of 1% per annum and even lower.

True investment securities have passed through these periods unscathed, but generally having been compelled to take a great depreciation in market value before the crisis was reached. After the crisis, and as money rates have gone down, investment securities have steadily gone up. In 1893 our financial markets in America soon followed the English markets. British Consols went up in the English market to a price which gave the buyer but little more than 2.4% on his investment. Many of our industrial bonds went up to a price which yielded the buyer much less than 4%. Many of our common stocks which were regarded as investment securities took a market value so high as to yield the buyer less than 5%. Nearly all municipal bonds went up to a price where they yielded the buyer 3% or less. New York City bonds sold at a price yielding only 2.65%. The New York Central bonds sold on the market at a price yielding the buyer scarcely more than 3%.

Now, that is one of the reasons why we say "Trade your inflated dollars into deflated investment securities, and,—do it now."

If you want to buy a short time security, or one with a call price only slightly above what you pay for it, you may have your reason for doing so; but that is is not what we would recommend.

If you buy the right kind of securities you will see them advance in value, while the money you now have will sink in its rental value. The mortgage which comes due two years from now may have to be reinvested at a very low rate. Banks that have been willing to pay interest on daily balances may have to send you a courteous note saying that hereafter they will have to revert to their former practice of paying no interest on daily balances.

Business inactivity or business depressions mean inevitably low rates for money. Low rates for money mean high market prices for true investment securities.

While the market offers many wonderful bargains in the way of speculative securities, we believe, nevertheless, that the true investment securities on the whole will yield a much higher profit in the aggregate than the speculative securities.

As we referred to the difficulties of Messrs. Baring Brothers, let us tell those not familiar with this bit of financial history that while this house had its difficulties it was inherently sound and in due time emerged from its troubles and is today one of the outstanding international financial houses, held in great respect by the financial world.

Our own financial houses proved their strength in the crisis they faced in the latter part of 1920. Most of our business concerns that have not emerged from their difficulties are, as Baring Brothers were in 1893, inherently sound.

Now, in our opinion, is the time to buy investment securities. Public buying has been going on actively since before the first of January. Many of the bargains have advanced materially, but there are still plenty of equally sound bargains to be had.

If you do not want to come to us for advice, go to any financial house of the many who have earned a moral and financial standing.

If you care to depend upon us, it will be treated as an honor transaction.

Yours sincerely,

ROADS ASK PAYMENT OF $300,000,000 NOW

Call on Congress to Provide for Quick Settlement of Government's Debt.

SEEK HOUSE ACTION TODAY

Rail Officials Say Money Is Available and Carriers Face Serious Situation Without It.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—An attempt will be made in the House tomorrow to suspend the rules and pass the bill to permit partial payments to railroads under the guarantee clause of the Transportation act. The greatest pressure has been exerted on Congress for prompt action by railroad officials and financiers. They have told the Republican leaders that the financial and industrial situation will be greatly improved if the Government will make payments of the amounts due the railroads—about $300,000,000—and that, unless something is done to aid the carriers soon, a very serious situation will follow.

Benjamin Strong, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank in New York, has been insistent in picturing the financial condition in which the railroads find themselves, due to the Government holding up the guaranteed payments. He has not hesitated to say plainly that many roads may go into receivers' hands and that great losses will be suffered by the industries dependent on the success of the railroads unless relief comes soon.

Senator Penrose, to whom Mr. Strong and many railroad Presidents made their appeal, said he was fully aware of the seriousness of their plight, and promised to exert his influence to have the bill passed before adjournment.

Nothing can be gained by the Government holding up these payments, members of Congress say, except to further embarrass the railroads and increase the industrial stagnation. The money has been appropriated and is available, they add, and therefore there will be no additional burden on the taxpayers. The Controller of the Treasury has interpreted the Transportation act to mean that after the six months' guarantee period expired no partial payments could be made. The pending legislation is to provide that partial payments shall be made of undisputed accounts which are approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Pennsylvania Wants $43,000,000.

The Pennsylvania Railroad alone has $43,000,000 coming to it from the Government, Samuel Rea, President of the road, informed the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee yesterday. Because this was held up, he said, the company was unable to pay $25,000,000 which it owed for supplies and commodities necessary to the running and maintenance of the road. If the amount owed by the Government were released, he added, there would be a general improvement in the industries doing business with the carriers, and curtailment by the roads would not be so great.

Representative S. W. Winslow, of Massachusetts, author of the bill to clarify the Transportation act, said:

"One-tenth of the workingmen of the country are connected with the railroads or industries dependent upon them. They are affected by the refusal of the Government to make the guaranteed payments, as is one-fifth of the wealth of the nation invested in railroads and allied industry. Those who appeared before the committee emphasized most forcibly the absolute need for such legislation. They made it clear that the railroads were unable to meet their proper running expenses and maintenance charges, to say nothing of paying their bills, long overdue, or undertaking to make repairs and provide for any development needed to keep up with the needs of transportation facilities.

"It was testified generally that they were unable either to sell new securities or to borrow money temporarily, because of the already too great extension of their credit, on account of which banks and other creditors are demanding payments which the carriers are unable to make.

Says It Causes Unemployment.

"Not only is this condition of affairs working against their day-to-day efficiency, but it is also resulting in the unemployment of tens of thousands of operatives who might, if the Government would make payments on account, be immediately and wisely set to work. The situation is so apparently unbusinesslike as to demand a correction of the present Government method of paying its indebtedness to the carriers."

Even under most favorable conditions extraordinary legislative methods will have to be employed to enact this legislation this session. There will be little opposition to it, because Congress already has passed on the issue and leaders on both sides are agreed that the money should be paid when the Interstate Commerce Commission orders.

Bank Rate and Deflation.

In the much-discussed question as to how far deflation in England was affected by the increase of the Bank of England rate to 7 per cent. last April, The London Economist remarks that it is doubtful whether deflation was caused by that action, but that it is possible that inflation might have increased still more rapidly if the bank rate had not gone up. Whether the higher bank rate did any good at all, The Economist continues, "is still a question that is much discussed. The inspectors of the Bankers' Clearing House, in their review of the year's operations, state that 'the higher value of money is without doubt partly responsible for the break in wholesale prices.' This break, though violent in its course and unpleasant in some of its results, was a step toward return of normal economic conditions."

MOTOR BRANCH CUTS WAGES

International Company, New Brunswick, Makes 10 to 30% Reduction.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Jan. 30.—The branch factory of the International Motor Company here posted a notice yesterday of reduction in wages ranging from 10 to 30 per cent., effective immediately. The working force will also be reduced. The wages of a number of the office force in the toolmakers' division will be cut from 85 to 65 cents an hour, and those of laborers from 55 to 35 cents.

Similar cuts have been announced at the plants of the Consolidated Fruit Jar Works and the India Rubber Company. Owing to the diversity of manufacturing plants in New Brunswick the total number of unemployed is comparatively small.

At a conference of manufacturers at Perth Amboy last week a general reduction in the wage scale of 20 per cent., effective throughout Middlesex County, was agreed upon.

WORLD PER CAPITA SAVINGS IS $13.58

Stock and Postal Banks of U. S., With $6,536,470,000, Lead All Other Nations.

AVERAGE DEPOSIT IS $158

Figures Compiled by Savings Banks Association Show $23,123,285,677 to Small Savers' Credit.

If all the money in the mutual, stock and postal savings banks in the world was equally distributed among the inhabitants of the globe every man, woman and child would have $13.58, according to statistics issued by the Savings Bank Association of the State of New York yesterday. The same authority shows that the 146,277,304 small savers of the world have on deposit $23,123,285,677, a sum greater than the combined wealth of Germany, Austria, Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria. The average deposit account the world over is $158.08.

Of the total amount of world savings, the people of the United States possess more than 25 per cent. In this country, aside from depositors in postal savings, there are 11,427,556 depositors in mutual and stock savings banks, with total deposits of $6,536,470,000, or 2 per cent. of the country's wealth. This marks a gain of approximately $634,000,000 in mutual and stock savings banks in 1920, according to the association.

The average deposit account in the mutual and stock savings banks in the United States is $571.99 and the average deposit per inhabitant $61.85. According to the figures of the Association more than one-tenth of the people in this country have accounts in either mutual, stock or postal savings banks. In the twenty-three foreign countries reporting with a combined population of 933,280,000, the average deposit account in savings banks is $122.34, and the average deposit per inhabitant $17.00.

Germany leads the world in point of numbers of savers in any one country. Theer. 27,000,000 or 40 per cent. of the inhabitants have savings in public or corporate savings banks. Japan stands second with more than 25,000,0000 depositors. Great Britain is third with 17,000,000 or 40 per cent. of the population. Fourth in volume of depositors is Russia where, according to the last official figures, there are 12,488,000 savers, representing almost 7 per cent. of the population of 178,905,000. The United States stands fifth in the volume of savings depositors.

American and Foreign Shipping.

Up to the close of November, the total tonnage of our foreign trade carried in American vessels last year was 29,107,944, as against 20,100,890 in the same period of 1919. The tonnage carried in foreign vessels was 29,375,396 last year, against 22,926,471 in 1919. The reason for the fact of an increase in tonnage carried by both classes of vessels was the increase in actual net total tonnage of our foreign trade from 43,027,370 in the eleven months of 1919 to 58,383,390 in 1920. The much greater relative increase in amount carried on American vessels is striking, although the foreign vessels as will be seen still carry slightly more in actual tonnage than our own.

To Aid Foreign Trade

OUR FOREIGN TRADE today is far greater than that of any other nation in all history.

But, as the world is more dependent than ever before upon the United States for the goods it urgently needs, so our national prosperity is likewise more dependent than ever upon the world's demand for our products.

We must keep our industries going at normal capacity. And we can do that only by providing the means for other countries, where the American dollar is at a prohibitive premium, to buy our products now and pay for them at a more favorable time.

Our people have the resources to accomplish this task. And an important step in providing means to utilize these resources more fully for this purpose is now being taken.

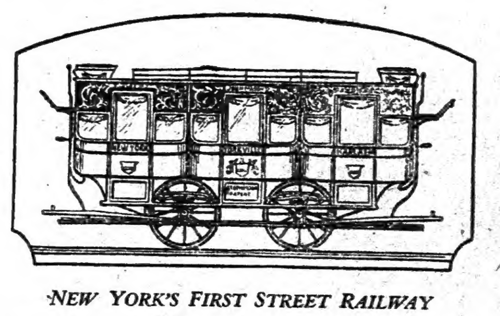
The Foreign Trade Financing Corporation is being organized under the provisions of the Edge Act, by representatives of agriculture, industry and finance in all parts of the country, to provide adequate facilities for sustaining our foreign trade. With a capital stock of one hundred million dollars, as planned, it will have the power, under the Edge Act, to extend credit abroad to a maximum amount of one billion dollars. It will be under the direct supervision of the Federal Reserve Board.

We consider it a privilege to participate with other financial institutions, manufacturing and export organizations, and similar interests throughout the country, in such a vital, constructive and forward-looking movement.

We believe that this corporation will supplement the facilities of American banks in financing foreign trade and will also render invaluable services to American industry. It should be a powerful factor in retaining and developing foreign markets, which are essential to the preservation of our national prosperity.

In the furtherance of that effort and in the interests of sound American business activities generally, at home and abroad, this Company offers the fullest coöperation of its trained organization of more than five thousand people; its capital, surplus and undivided profits of more than $60,000,000; its resources of more than $900,000,000, and its world-wide banking facilities.

Guaranty Trust Company of New York



NEW YORK'S FIRST STREET RAILWAY

THE great complexity of interests which characterized those men who directed the destinies of the Bank of the Manhattan Company, brought the influence of the Bank to bear upon pretty nearly every project affecting the welfare or aggrandizement of New York City. Thus, it was a director of the Bank, Walter Bowne, who as Mayor of the City signed the act which authorized the first street railway company—the New York and Harlem Railroad Company—to take possession of the necessary ground, and who was accorded the place of honor at the opening of the line in 1831. Today, the Bank is daily offering its cooperation and the facilities of its immense resources, accumulated over a period of 122 years, to the financing of New York merchants whose growth was premised, and whose very existence is based, on a gigantic system of transportation which had its humble beginnings nine decades ago.

NEW ENGLAND ROADS

Trunk Line Pool to Renew Offer at Meeting Here Tomorrow.

RATE DIVISIONS TO STAND

Fund Is to Be Furnished for Meeting Fixed Operating Charges for This Year.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30 (Associated Press).—The formation of a pool to give the railroads of New England $15,600,000 to meet this year's fixed operating charges, in lieu of the proposed redivision or joint freight rates with carriers west of the Hudson River, probably will be authorized at a meeting of trunk line executives Tuesday in New York. dents at the meeting. E. J. Pearson,

The offer was made to the New England lines at a conference here last week and accepted by a majority of the Presidents at the meeting. E. U. Yearson, President of the New York, New Haven & Hartford, alone was loath to accept the offer, but said he would consult his Board of Directors.

Presidents of trunk lines will attend the New York meeting and hear the report of the committee which conferred with the New England carriers here last week. Railroad men here believe they will vote to give the New England roads $15,600,000 to tide them over a period of thirteen months, dating from Jan. 1.

A division of the joint freight rates as now maintained cannot be changed without months of study and work on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and Chairman Clark has expressed unwillingness to undertake the task without first making an effort to settle the case "out of court."

It is understood that if the offer is accepted the case now before the commission will be withdrawn and the joint rate divisions will remain as they now are. If the New England lines are unable to effect an economic readjustment in the year, they may bring a rate case before the commission and secure the needed $27,500,000 a year revenue in that manner.

Railroad executives in Washington express the belief that the next year will see numerous readjustments in the railroad world and declare that these will enable the New England lines to forestall bankruptcy by accepting the offer of the trunk lines and waiting for time to play the all important part in the rôle of reducing operating charges. It was said that a tendency to reduce labor charges already was evident and that other cuts in operating costs would follow as a matter of course.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, issued a statement tonight in which he asserted that "whisky-prescribing physicians are quitting," and that only 22 per cent. of the physicians of this country now are holding permits to prescribe whisky.

"The remarkable decrease in the number of physicians who prescribe whisky is causing great satisfaction at dry headquarters," said Mr. Wheeler. "No doctor can prescribe whisky without a permit.

"The number of physicians in the United States is now 152,627. The number holding permits is 33,379. The number not holding permits is 119,248.

"The per cent. of physicians no holding permits is 78, and the per cent. holding permits is 22.

"The above facts and the laws of the States completely answer the charge that the Volstead act is drastic in this respect."

Mr. Wheeler named twenty-four States in which physicians hold no permits to prescribe liquor and druggists cannot fill prescriptions for whisky or brandy. These States are Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Maine, Missisippi, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Oregon, Tennessee, Utah, Washington and West Virginia.

"There are over 40,000 physicians in these States," said Mr. Wheeler. "In many of these States pure grain or ethyl alcohol may be used as a solvent or preservative in the compounding of medicines. The trend of sentiment on medicinal whisky is with the National Medical Association. It declares that whisky has no therapeutic value."

The Anti-Saloon League, according to Mr. Wheeler, will not ask for any change at present in the Volstead act, which permits the prescribing of one pint of whisky in ten days on a doctor's prescription for medicinal purposes.

"It will take some time, doubtless, in the other States to educate public sentiment to realize that there are proper substitutes for whisky which have greater medicinal values," said Mr. Wheeler. "Many physicians who hold these permits admit they rarely prescribe the whisky except when the patient insists upon it, and, in fact, prescribes it for himself. It is clear that whisky is losing out, not only as a beverage, but as a bona fide medicament."

Communists Seek to Tie Up Railways in War With Fascisti.

ROME, Jan. 30.—The Communists are working energetically to bring about a general strike, and especially an entire suspension of the railway service, as a protest against the recent clashes between Socialists and members of the Fascisti, or extreme Nationalist Party. They are encountering great opposition from the workingmen, however, who declare they are tired of being the victims of political manoeuvres.

The Government is taking all necessary measures to meet any event with the greatest energy.

TEUTON INDUSTRY UNHURT

British Investigator Shows How Late Foe Wins Trade — Sells England $9,000,000 in Toys.

"Germany is still a perfect industrial machine, running at slow speed, it is true, but undamaged as yet in its vital parts, and would respond readily to any stimulus."

This statement by a British Government official who has made a recent study of commercial and industrial conditions in Germany sums up the position of the Teutons, according to P. Harvey Middleton, Assistant Manager of the International Trade Department of the Guaranty Trust Company, who has prepared a summary of Germany's plan to extend her foreign trade.

"That they have made a good beginning," he says, "is evident from the fact that German exports for the first five months of 1920 amounted to 23,688,000,000 marks as compared with 10,067,000,000 marks for the entire year of 1919. It must be remembered, however, that these export figures include goods delivered to the Allies under the treaty of peace, and also that from the signing of the armistice in November, 1918, until March, 1920, an enormous volume of goods was smuggled out of Germany through the occupied territory, the so-called "hole in the west."

"For the eleven months ended November, 1920, the United States imported from Germany merchandise valued at $84,000,000, compared with $10,608,141 for the entire year of 1919. Germany imported from the United States in the eleven months ended November, 1920, merchandise valued at $253,000,000, compared with $92,761,314 for the entire year 1919.

"Thousands of German salesmen are reported to be at work not only in the former neutral countries, but in all the European and Asiatic countries with which they were at war, offering low prices and long credits and promising quicker deliveries than their competitors. Buyers from many of the larger nations are now in Germany placing substantial orders for motor trucks, dyestuffs, toys, iron and steel products, pianos, glassware, knit goods, sewing machines, electrical goods and hundreds of other items. It is estimated that the sales of German toys in England in 1920 amounted to over $9,000,000 compared with $1,850,000 in 1919."

Falls to Death in Rocking Chair.

Teosil Zawicke, 49 years old, is dead in his apartment at 548 Grove Street, Jersey City, as a result of falling over backwards in a rocking chair last night. Zawicke, as the chair tilted back, struck his head against a stove. He was dead when a physician arrived from the City Hospital.

RAIL LABOR RULES

Roads' Executives to Submit Statement to Federal Board Today.

BROTHERHOODS WILL FIGHT

National Agreements Called Ruinous When Applied Universally, and Bar to Pre-War Efficiency.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—The Labor Committee of the American Association of Railway Executives will present to the Railroad Labor Board tomorrow a statement advocating abrogation of national agreements, "which officials contend operate as a bar to attaining pre-war efficiency."

Railroad Brotherhood officials have made no secret of their intention to fight the elimination of any of the rules that constitute the national agreements which became effective just before the roads were turned back to private ownership.

The railway executives, according to the forecast tonight, will emphasize what they conceive to be the public's interest in any working arrangement between railroads and their employes.

Much testimony has been introduced during the hearings before the Labor Board to show that shop employes are receiving large sums for work they are not doing; that the abolition of the piecework system, by which each man was paid according to the work he did, has greatly reduced efficiency of shop employes throughout the country.

An officer of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad testified that under the day work rule employes take one-half more time to bore car brasses than under the piecework system. The decline in the average output per hour of the Pennsylvania's car repairers has been 27 per cent. since day work was substituted for piecework, according to an official of the road. Similar testimony was given by officials of seven other railroads.

With reference to the national agreements as a whole, railway officials protest that these are ruinous when universally applied, as now. They contend that individual railroads should be allowed to make local agreements regarding conditions of work with their own employes, as conditions under which railways operate vary so much that hardly any rule can be applied universally without producing what they term "grotesque results."

Senator Charles C. Lockwood and other members of the Joint Legislative Committee on Housing are urging Samuel Untermyer, its chief counsel, to take up the final phase of the committee's work affecting insurance companies and financial institutions, it became known yesterday, but Mr. Untermyer has not yet announced his decision.

Mr. Untermyer takes the view that the only purpose of the Lockwood Committee is to relieve the housing shortage by recommending constructive legislation, but the committee would be deprived of the knowledge which would make such recommendations useful if its powers were to be restricted.

It is understood that Mr. Untermyer doubts whether examination into the affairs of the insurance companies and financial institutions would be of value with the present limitations of the powers of the committee.

Senator Lockwood had a long conference with Mr. Untermyer on Saturday, following which Mr. Untermyer made known his position in a letter to the chairman of the committee. The contents have not been made public.

K. of C. Placed 543,000 Veterans.

The final report of the Knights of Columbus employment system shows, it is announced, that 183 secretaries operated bureaus in every State, getting jobs for 543,000 former service men at a total cost of $272,275. Of the total number, 57,140 men were placed in this city, exclusive of Brooklyn.

OPEN SHOP ATTACK

National Association of Manufacturers Asks Federal Council to State Its Attitude.

MOVE TO CUT WAGES HERE

Merchants' Association Reports Plants Employing Thousands Plan Reductions.

With the Merchants' Association reporting a movement well under way to cut down wages in industrial plants, the National Association of Manufacturers yesterday called upon the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, representing 19,000,000 American Protestants, to define its attitude toward the closed shop.

"The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ," said the manufacturers, "has recently attacked the open shop movement. The council's statement, it is true, denounces as 'unfair and inimical * * * coercion exercised by labor bodies in behalf of the closed shop.' But this point is submerged in the attack. The Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, in a recent signed article, has made the assertion that the to later make it possible when looking for funds from business men to deny that it had endorsed the closed shop. It is not well for organizations such as the Federal Council to take hand in the affairs of industry unless they announce squarely where they stand. As a basis of industrial relationship do they support the principles of the closed shop or the open shop? Will the council then support one side or the other?

"The National Association of Manufacturers stands for the open shop—open to both the union and the independent worker, without discrimination of any kind. There is no attempt to destroy unions. The open shop simply prevents the carrying out of restrictive union policies."

The association reported more than 500 organizations in a nation-wide movement for the open shop.

The survey of the Merchants' Association to ascertain the extent of the wage-reduction movement here included thirty-seven representative manufacturing establishments, all of which employ 500 or more workers. Of the thirty-seven, fifteen have already made wage cuts, affecting about 6,000 employes. Four contemplated making pay decreases in the near future. Six reported no cut in prospect, while eleven said they had not determined upon their course.

BUENOS AIRES, ARGENTINA

How many of us when we think of big American cities, think only of those in the United States? Yet Buenos Aires is only outranked by New York, Chicago and Philadelphia.

Buenos Aires is one of the world's greatest centers of art and commerce. Upwards of 38 steamship lines radiate from it to all parts of the globe, carrying grain, meat, hides, wool and oil.

Like all other South and Central American cities, it keeps in constant touch with the other markets of the New World through ALL AMERICA CABLES. News and business communications that otherwise would take weeks to deliver, are flashed instantly back and forth.

ALL AMERICA CABLES is one of the great forces aiding the development of commerce and friendships between the peoples of our Western Hemisphere. It is the only direct and only American-owned means of communication.

"Like the threads of a giant web ALL AMERICA CABLES radiate out from New York commercially enmeshing Central and South America."
